FCC ADOPTS SOLUTION TO INTERFERENCE PROBLEM
FACED BY 800 MHZ PUBLIC SAFETY RADIO SYSTEMS

Band Reconfiguration and Enhanced Best Practices Are Key Elements

Washington, D.C. - Today, the Federal Communications Commission adopted a plan to resolve the ongoing and growing problem of interference to public safety radio systems operating in the 800 MHz band. In recognition of the critical need for the Nation's first responders to have robust and highly reliable communications systems, the Commission based its decision on meeting three essential goals: first and foremost, resolving the interference problem to public safety radio systems; second, ensuring equitable treatment of all of the affected spectrum licensees with minimal disruption to users and the public alike; and third, as the Commission is the federal agency charged with administering the spectrum for the public good, exercising sound principles of spectrum management. The decision was unanimous.

Based on the extensive record developed regarding the public safety interference problem, the Commission concluded that the most effective solution is a Commission-derived plan, which is comprised of both long-term and short-term components. Over the long-term, the Commission adopted a new band plan for the 800 MHz band to address the root cause of the interference problem by separating generally incompatible technologies (a chart of the band plan is attached), with the costs of relocating 800 MHz incumbents to be paid by Nextel Communications, Inc. (Nextel). In the short-term, the Commission implemented objective technical standards -
"Enhanced Best Practices" -- for defining "unacceptable interference" to public safety systems operating in the 800 MHz band
and procedures detailing the responsibilities and expectations regarding abatement of such interference.

Since 1999, the Commission has received reports of interference to 800 MHz public safety communications systems from Commercial Mobile Radio Services (CMRS) providers operating systems on channels in close proximity to those utilized by public safety entities. Initially, the Commission's approach to interference resolution was to urge the involved parties to make voluntary technical changes to prevent or reduce interference at particular sites. In 2000, the public safety and CMRS community formalized this approach as "Best Practices." In recent years, however, 800 MHz public safety systems have encountered increasing amounts of interference. As a result, the Commission determined that reliance on these voluntary measures alone was insufficient and thus initiated a rulemaking proceeding to develop the effective solution it adopted today.

Today, the Commission adopted "Enhanced Best Practices" to address interference problems pending completion of the band reconfiguration process. The Commission rejected this as an exclusive remedy for the interference problem because the transactional costs of applying Enhanced Best Practices will continue to increase as new public safety and other non-cellular systems come on line and the commercial carriers using cellular-architecture increase the capacity of their systems by adding more cells. The Commission recognized that these costs will disproportionately affect public safety agencies, which operate with extremely limited resources. Under the new regime, the Commission adopted an objective technical standard for defining unacceptable interference and placed strict responsibility on carriers to fix such interference.

To accomplish the reconfiguration, the Commission will require Nextel to give up rights to certain of its licenses in the 800 MHz band and all of its licenses in the 700 MHz band. In exchange, the Commission will modify Nextel's licenses to provide the right to operate on two five-MHz blocks in a different part of the spectrum -- specifically 1910-1915 MHz and 1990-1995 MHz -- conditioned on Nextel fulfilling certain obligations specified in the Commission's decision.

The Commission determined that the overall value of the 1.9 GHz spectrum rights is $4.8 billion, less the cost of relocating incumbent users. In addition, the Commission concluded that it would credit to Nextel the value of the spectrum rights that Nextel will relinquish and the actual costs Nextel incurs for to relocate all incumbents in the 800 MHz band. To the extent that these combined credits total less than the determined value of the 1.9 GHz spectrum rights, Nextel will make an anti-windfall payment to the United States Department of the Treasury at the conclusion of the relocation process equal to the difference channels, becoming available to public safety, critical infrastructure, and private wireless users, including 10 channels for public safety/critical infrastructure interoperability. As with prior spectrum relocation programs initiated by the Commission, Nextel - as the new entrant into public safety bands - will be required to provide the existing public safety licensees with comparable facilities. To ensure that the band reconfiguration process will be completed, the Commission will require Nextel to establish certain escrow accounts and a letter of credit in the amount of $2.5 billion specifically to ensure adequate funding of relocation costs for other 800 MHz incumbents. Similarly, as a new entrant in the 1.9 GHz band, Nextel is also obligated to fund the transition of incumbent users to comparable facilities.

Recognizing the complexity of the band reconfiguration and looking at the experience of other federal agencies that have used a similar process, the Commission provided for an independent "Transition Administrator" to oversee the administrative and financial aspects of the band reconfiguration, provide accountability to the reconfiguration process, and ensure that band reconfiguration is achieved with minimal disruption to licensees, particularly public safety entities. Specifically, the Transition Administrator, whose decisions will be subject to de novo Commission review, will authorize disbursement of funds for band reconfiguration based on requests for payment by affected parties and resolve funding disputes. In the event of a material change in Nextel's financial situation, the Commission concluded that the Transition Administrator would be empowered to take control of the guaranteed funds and complete the band reconfiguration.

The Commission determined that this approach provides significant public interest benefits by quickly resolving the interference problem which reduces operating costs to public safety and commercial providers, creating more spectrum and increased flexibility for public safety licensees, and accelerating band-clearing at 1.9 GHz, all of which demonstrate improved spectrum management over this issue and result in more effective protection of life and safety for both emergency responders and the public.

The Commission recognized that, while it is essential to act promptly in light of the vital public safety interest served by this decision, the parties have raised novel issues regarding appropriations law, and the U.S. Comptroller General has agreed to review those issues. The Commission stated that, should the Comptroller General unambiguously conclude that the Commission's plan violates the appropriations statutes, the Commission will address - either on its own motion or on that of moving parties - whether it is appropriate to stay the effect of some aspects of the plan pending a final decision by the Court of Appeals on any application for review.

in the United States (reported as of July 13, 2004)*

State	Neuroinvasive disease	Fever	Other Clinical/ Unspecified	Total Human Cases Reported to CDC	Deaths
Arizona	47	12	7	66	2
California	9	11	0	20	0
Colorado	1	11	0	12	0
Florida	1	1	0	2	0
Iowa	1	0	0	1	1
Michigan	1	0	0	1	0

Total	61	40	7	108	3

Neuroinvasive Disease refers to severe disease cases, particularly West Nile meningitis and West Nile encephalitis. Click here for further explanations of neuroinvasive West Nile virus disease and West Nile fever.

West Nile fever refers to typically less severe cases that show no evidence of neuroinvasion. West Nile fever is not currently on the list of nationally notifiable diseases, and therefore it is optional whether or not state health departments report these cases to CDC.

Click here for further explanations of neuroinvasive West Nile virus disease and West Nile fever.

Other Clinical includes persons with clinical manifestations other than WN fever, WN encephalitis or WN meningitis, such as acute flaccid paralysis. Unspecified cases are those for which sufficient clinical information was not provided.

Total Human Cases Reported to CDC- These numbers reflect both mild and severe human disease cases occurring between Jan.1 -July 13, 2004 that have been reported to ArboNet by state and local health departments. ArboNet is the national, electronic surveillance system established by CDC to assist states in tracking West Nile virus and other mosquito-borne viruses. Information regarding 2004 virus/disease activity is posted when such cases are reported to CDC.

Of the 108 cases, 61 (56%) were reported as West Nile meningitis or encephalitis (neuroinvasive disease), 40 (37%) were reported as West Nile fever (milder disease), and 7 (6%) were clinically unspecified at this time. Please refer to state health department web sites for further details regarding state case totals.

Jury sides with Ford in suit over safety of police cars

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BELLEVILLE - A jury in the first class-action lawsuit filed over the safety of Ford's Crown Victoria police cruisers ruled Friday that the cars are safe, but a judge now must decide if the automaker violated state consumer fraud laws.

Class-action suits are pending in at least 12 states over the Crown Victoria Police Interceptor, a specially built police cruiser that accounts for the majority of police cars on U.S. streets.

At least 15 officers nationwide since 1983 have died in fiery crashes after their Crown Victorias were rear-ended - including one in Texas last month.

None of those deaths were in Illinois, but the St. Clair County Sheriff's Office and nearby Centreville Police Department sued Ford in 2002. They accused the Detroit automaker of fraud and deceptive trade practices in a bid to force the company to retrofit cruisers with special safety equipment.

The jury was asked to decide whether Ford committed fraud by failing to disclose alleged problems with the car to law enforcement agencies. But jurors ruled Friday that the car was safe, dismissing the fraud count.

"It's a terrible thing that someone has to die, but their cars are no more dangerous than other Crown Victorias on the road now," juror Judy Burgess told the Belleville News-Democrat.

Attorneys for the St. Clair County Sheriff's Office and the Centreville Police Department did not immediately return calls to The Associated Press for comment Friday.

Lawyers for Ford argued during the trial in Belleville that the vehicle is safe - but officers are more likely to travel at high speeds and park at the sides of highways, creating a higher risk for serious accidents.

"To have 12 folks unanimously agree that the Number One police vehicle in the U.S. is safe is very important and significant to Ford," said Ford attorney Jim Feeney.

St. Clair County Circuit Judge Lloyd Cueto now must rule on three remaining counts.

Under Illinois law, Cueto has to decide whether Ford engaged in deceptive trade practices, violated Illinois consumer fraud laws, and unjustly enriched the company by the fraud.

Assistance to Firefighters Grant Program Reauthorized for Five More Years

On October 9th, Congress passed H.R. 4200, the Fiscal Year 2005 Department of Defense Authorization Act. Included in the bill was legislation to reauthorize the Assistance to Firefighters Grant Program (FIRE Act) through 2009.

Highlights of the reauthorization include:
a.. Authorizes appropriations of $900 million, $950 million, and $1 billion in FY 2005, 2006, and 2007-2009 respectively.
b.. Reduces the non-federal match for departments serving jurisdictions of greater than 50,000 people from 30% to 20% and jurisdictions of less than 20,000 people from 10% to 5%.
c.. Increases the maximum grant size to $1 million for departments that serve a jurisdiction with 500,000 people or less; 1,750,000 for departments that serve a jurisdiction with 500,000 to 1,000,000 people; and $2,750,000 for departments that serve a jurisdiction with more than 1,000,000.
d.. Increases the grant cap from $750,000 to $1 million for fire prevention grants. Specifies the fire prevention grants to community organizations shall not have a matching requirement.
e.. Specifies that non-affiliated EMS organizations may compete for up to 2% of the funds appropriated each fiscal year. The bill defines the term non-affiliated EMS organization to mean a public or private non-profit EMS organization that is not affiliated with a hospital and does not serve a geographic area in which the Director finds that EMS is adequately provided by a fire department.
f.. Codifies current program practices regarding annual criteria development and peer-review process. These practices have been crucial to the programs tremendous success.
g.. Includes language to move the program back to USFA. However, Congressional appropriators and DHS leadership have continued to insist that the Office for State and Local Government Coordination and Preparedness (formerly ODP) administer the program.
"The NVFC applauds the reauthoization of the Assistance to Firefighters Grant program for another five years," said NVFC Chairman Philip C. Stittleburg. "Although an important provision protecting the right to volunteer is not in the final version, Congress has still drafted a good piece of legislation and we appreciate the Fire Caucus leadership's efforts to strengthen and protect the volunteer fire service and the program."

The bipartisan group of Members that played a critical role in the bills passage include: Senators John McCain (R-AZ), Christopher Dodd (D-CT), Mike DeWine (R-OH) and Representatives Curt Weldon (R-PA), Steny Hoyer (D-MD), Sherwood Boehlert (R-NY), Bill Pascrell (D-NJ), Nick Smith (R-MI) and Rob Andrews (D-NJ).

House and Senate Armed Services Committee leadership, including Senators John Warner (R-VA) and Carl Levin (D-MI) and Representatives Duncan Hunter (R-CA) and Ike Skelton (D-MO), were once again very supportive the fire services efforts to pass a major piece of legislation as part of the annual Defense Authorization bill.

The President is expected to quickly sign the bill into law.

78. Company offers 'jammers' to silence cell phone noise

Company offers 'jammers' to silence cell phone noise
Devices are illegal in United States

By KEN BELSON
N.Y. TIMES NEWS SERVICE

First, the world fell in love with cellular phones, and hardly took any notice of their annoying side.
Now, the complaints about cell phones seem almost as common as the phones are: They shatter the quiet in the worst times and places; their users can be rude or dangerously distracted, and so on. And some of the aggrieved are deciding that the usual appeals for considerate behavior aren't solving the problem.

Enter the jammer. People who would use technology to fight technology, by installing radio-jamming equipment that keeps cell phones from working nearby whether the phone user likes it or not, got a significant boost last month in France. The minister of industry, Patrick Devedjian, ruled that theater and cinema owners could use jammers there as long as they did not stop calls to the French equivalent of 911.

The ruling had little immediate effect, because there is no jammer on the market that can permit emergency calls while blocking the rest. But the symbolic importance was huge: Devedjian gave a significant government sanction to an act bound to infuriate phone users and the cell phone industry alike - the deliberate private creation of cell phone dead zones.

Devices that radiate signals that interfere with the public airwaves, including cell phone jammers, are illegal in the United States. But the companies that sell them say that hasn't stopped Americans from importing hundreds of jammers. Some are intended to eliminate nuisances to the public, as in restaurants and theaters, but other motives appear to be at work as well.

"More and more employers are getting frustrated with their employees" who spend work time chatting on their cellphones, said Michael Menage, the owner of Global Gadget UK, a British company that sells Asian-made jammers over the Internet, including to Americans. "We tell them it is illegal, but they are so at the end of their tether, they buy them anyway," Menage said. "The moral side of it is up to them."

Hotel companies, whose revenue from guest-room phone use has plummeted since cell phones became common, are said to be interested as well, and there are reports that a European chain has bought jammers.

Neither Menage nor other vendors would agree to name any companies that use them. But the devices are cheap enough - as little as $250 - that even tiny companies can buy them.

It is easy enough to see why a theater might want to keep phones from ringing in the audience, but the issue of cell phones in the workplace is more complex. Many companies depend on cell phones to keep employees accessible and working while at home, on the road, or even on vacation. But as the line between company time and private time has blurred, employees also have come to depend on them to stay in touch with their private lives while at work, whether checking up on the kids, making dinner plans or just chatting with friends.

"Companies have asked their people to work 24/7, check their e-mails, check their BlackBerries, to be on the cell phones during their commutes," said John Challenger, the chief executive of Challenger, Gray & Christmas, which consults on employment issues. "If companies try to cut out personal use, they'll have a war on their hands."

Even so, more than half the companies surveyed by the Society for Human Resource Management said they have a policy on workplace cell phone use or are planning one. Some ban camera phones out of fear of industrial espionage; others, worried about liability, ban cell phone use while driving.

A few go further. TRW Automotive, an auto parts maker, forbids all personal electronics, including phones, beepers, PDAs and radios, in its factories. Stacie Helms, an employee relations manager at the company, said the idea was to eliminate distractions, both for safety and productivity reasons. "There would be a temptation to leave the line to answer the cell phone," she said.

A company that relies on a jammer instead of a policy cannot say so publicly, of course, but it is unlikely to be caught. Users cannot tell whether a "no service" message is caused by jamming or just the usual spottiness of signal coverage. The government has never prosecuted anyone for using a jammer. (The fine would be $11,000.)

People push back against the annoying sides of new technology in many ways, from answering machines to spam filters. A new device called TV-B-Gone can be used to turn off almost any television.

But cell phones are different. Stuffed with the phone numbers of friends and family, they become constant companions and instant conduits to the owner's closest confidants. That helps explain why users often react so defensively when asked to stop talking, and why companies resort to jammers.

"There's an attitude toward a radical individualism about expression and ownership that has now extended to technology and new media," said Sherry Turkle, the director of the Initiative on Technology and Self at MIT. "Once people identify the cell phone as a part of themselves, they're reluctant to give it up."

Linton (Ind.) police dispatchers can now notify the Air Evac Lifeteam helicopter company immediately for EMS incidents, part of a program to bring improved medical care to Greene County in the southwest corner of the state. Air Evac operates 40 helicopters and covers 14 midwestern states. "Early activation is key. That's the kind of stuff that saves lives," LPD dispatcher supervisor Kyle Butler told a reporter. The average air transport bill is $7,000 to $10,000, paid by medical insurance, or individuals can become Air Evac members for $40 a year. Air Evac charges nothing if they're cancelled enroute to the incident, officials pointed out.

Topic: 97 Message: 97

Too all in the group:
The first week of the year, I will be ammending the license to add I-WARN bases in Flora (Clay County), Elsah (Jersey County), Tallula (Menard County) and a repeater in New Douglas (Bond County).
The input frequency is pending at this time.

There has been additional interest in Bloomington (McLean County), Caseyville (St. Clair County) and O'Fallon (St. Clair County).
If there are any other interests, the payment needs to be mailed by the first week of January.

I HAVE lost many emails from the last few months with information from possible sites.

The Frequency Coordination Fee is $175. (Must be paid by you)

Please send payment to:
Terry Weatherford, Jr.
c/o I-WARN
229 Glen Lake Drive
Glen Carbon IL 62034

I also need your mailing address, coordinates, tower height, tower type.

I personally, have already paid for the Glen Carbon (Madison) & Carlinville (Macoupin) bases and will pay the FCC fee (of $55) for the ammendment and the additional fee to turn the New Douglas site into a repeater ($340, opposed to $170).

See the updated I-WARN website at www.I-WARN.org or www.I-WARN.com

I-WARN email addresses are available. They can be used POP (Outlook Express) or webmail.

Thanks and if you have any questions, please get back to me ASAP.

99. When to Issue Amber Alert Can be Dilemma for Police

: When to Issue Amber Alert Can be Dilemma for Police

News-Spec Report Posted on Sunday, January 02 @ 21:35:00 PST by Director

Indianapolis - Two missing child cases _ one ending in death, the other in rescue illustrate the dilemma facing investigators who must decide whether to issue an Amber Alert.

Police found the body of a missing Indianapolis girl in a Hancock County creek last Thursday after a weeklong search during which authorities never issued an Amber Alert.

The following day, police in South Bend issued an alert when a man reported his 8-month-old son's maternal uncle had taken the child at gunpoint. The baby was found hours later with his mother in Gary. Relatives blamed the incident on a custody dispute.

Amber Alerts rapidly notify the public by radio, television, e-mail and electronic traffic signs about missing children who may be in danger. Police investigating each case decide whether to issue the alert

No alert was issued after 12-year-old Christina Tedder disappeared because no one witnessed an abduction or crime, Marion County authorities said.

"Police are constantly having to go through this balancing act, measuring the dangers that a child faces versus not desensitizing the public (by issuing too many alerts)," said Robert Hoever of the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children, a nonprofit organization in Alexandria, Va.

Tedder, an honor roll student at Stonybrook Middle School, vanished Dec. 24 after she left her mother's apartment on the city's east side to walk to a nearby convenience store.

Her body, clad only in a pair of socks, was found shortly after midnight Thursday in a creek about four miles east of Geist Reservoir in northeastern Hancock County. Police said Jeffrey A. Voss, 39, led detectives to the creek where he told them he had dumped the girl's body after abducting and strangling her.

Tedder's father, Guillermo Mendoza, and other family members said police should have issued an Amber Alert.

"When you've got a 12-year-old missing, every father and mother in the world is going to start worrying and thinking the worst," Mendoza said. "Somebody could have done something to save her."

Authorities' decision on issuing an alert is complicated by the fact that the vast majority of missing child cases involve runaways or custody disputes, The Indianapolis Star reported. Generally, advocates discourage police from issuing alerts in parental abductions.

Last July, police in Rushville issued an Amber Alert when a woman told them her children's father had taken their teenage sons to Kentucky. The alert was canceled when the boys were found unharmed, and both parents claimed legal custody.

"When you're dealing with child protection, and you're dealing with this balancing act, the scales always tip over to saving the child's life," said Hoever. "But we don't want to get the car alarm syndrome out there, where nobody notices when an alert is issued."

Forty-nine states have adopted Amber Alert systems, which the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children credit for helping to safely recover 176 children.

Since Indiana adopted the system in 2002, it has helped to safely recover at least 18 children, according to state figures.

100. FCC Decision on mandantory narrowbanding

Subject: FCC Decision on mandantory narrowbanding

All Illinois APCO and NENA members,
The FCC released new information on Narrowband requirements for radio frequencies below 512 mHz. The decision is best summarized by the following information provided by Steven J. Makky. I have directly copied his summary here, and give full credit to him for the work (Thanks Steve!!). This is an EXCELLENT summary. I urge everyone to take the time to read it.

On Thursday the 23rd, the FCC left public safety a Christmas present when it published a decision on the compulsory narrowbanding of all radio communications systems below 512 MHz

http://hraunfoss.fcc.gov/edocs_public/attachmatch/FCC-04-292A1.pdf >

Synopsis:

* For Public Safety Radio Pool licensees operating in the 150-174 MHz and 421-512 MHz bands, [the FCC establishes] a January 1, 2013 deadline for migration to 12.5 kHz technology, or a technology that achieves the narrowband equivalent of one channel per 12.5 kHz of channel bandwidth (voice) or 4800 bits per second per 6.25 kHz (data) if the bandwidth for transmissions specified in the modification application is greater than 12.5 kHz.

* Applications for new operations using 25 kHz channels will be accepted until January 1, 2011. After January 1, 2011, applications for new operations using a bandwidth greater than 12.5 kHz will be accepted only to the extent that the equipment meets the spectrum efficiency standard of one channel per 12.5 kHz of channel bandwidth (voice) or 4800 bits per second per 6.25 kHz (data).

* Applications for modification of operations that expand the authorized contour of an existing station using 25 kHz channels will be accepted until January 1, 2011. After January 1, 2011, applications for modification of operations that expand the authorized contour of an existing station will be accepted only to the extent that the equipment meets the spectrum efficiency standard of one channel per 12.5 kHz of channel bandwidth (voice) or 4800 bits per second per 6.25 kHz (data) if the bandwidth for transmissions specified in the modification application is greater than 12.5 kHz.

* Manufacture and importation of any 150-174 MHz and 421-512 MHz band equipment operating on a channel bandwidth up to 25 kHz will be permitted until January 1, 2011. After January 1, 2011, manufacture and importation of any 150-174 MHz and 421-512 MHz band equipment operating on a channel bandwidth greater than 12.5 kHz will be accepted only to the extent that the equipment meets the spectrum efficiency standard of one channel per 12.5 kHz of channel bandwidth (voice) or 4800 bits per second per 6.25 kHz (data).

* We revise our Rules to exempt Part 90 paging-only frequencies from the narrowbanding requirements.

What this means:

1 - Any VHF or UHF radio system that does not achieve one voice path within a 12.5 kHz channel space will be usable for only eight more years. Period. After then, these must be narrowbanded or taken off the air.

2 - You have 6 more years to license and put wideband systems into operation if frequencies are available in your locale. You can operate them until January 1, 2013 when they must be narrowbanded or taken off the air.

3 - You have 6 more years to extend the service contour of a wideband system if it will not interfere with other systems, and then, two years after that to use it.

4 - Manufacturers can import and sell equipment that is "wideband" for six more years. After then, they will not be allowed to do so, although "new old stock" may be present, but would only be usable until 2013. Narrowband capable equipment has been on the market since 1997.

5 - Some paging channels are exempted. THESE ARE NOT FIRE DEPARTMENT AND EMS ALERTING CHANNELS (those MUST still be narrowbanded), but rather are one-way paging channels used mostly in hospital paging systems. On VHF, these are: 152.0075, 157.4500 and 163.2500.

6 - If your radio system is operating in "narrowband" mode, (one voice path in a 12.5 kHz channel as seen on the license as an emission designator of "11K2"), or from 30 - 50 MHz, or on 700 or 800 MHz, you are not affected by any of this.

The following is important - PLANNING FOR NARROWBANDING EXISTING SYSTEMS, INCLUDING BASE STATIONS, MOBILES, PORTABLES AND ALERTING RECEIVERS MUST BEGIN NOW. It is incumbent upon all agencies to assess their needs and perform engineering studies to determine how compulsory reduction in bandwidth will affect their coverage within their area of operation. REDUCING BANDWIDTH MAY CREATE SAFETY ISSUES IN COVERAGE. IN SOME INSTANCES, ADDITION OF MORE SITES, OR REPLACEMENT OF COMMUNICATIONS ASSETS MAY BE NECESSARY, EVEN IF THE SYSTEM IS "NEW" AND HAS NOT FULLY DEPRECIATED. Following development of a plan, a commitment to budget must also be obtained.

Those with questions or concerns regarding this issue should feel free to contact me at my office or wireless numbers (listed below), or by means of return e-mail directly or through the list.

108. Tower Restrictions/Zoning

Does any one have local laws or zoning ordinances that limit tower height, type, antennas, etc.?

Just always wondered what cities unfairly regulate this situation.

ARRL Volunteers, PRB-1 Help Midwestern Amateurs Get Tower Permits
NEWINGTON, CT, Jan 14, 2005--Two Midwestern radio amateurs have succeeded in their efforts to be allowed to erect antenna support structures on their residential properties. Both cases hinged largely on the requirement of the limited federal preemption known as PRB-1 that localities "reasonably accommodate" Amateur Radio communication with "minimum practicable regulation." As a result, city officials in Wheaton, Illinois, have granted John Siepmann, N9NA, a permit to build a 42-foot tower in his back yard. And in Ohio, Brian "Tim" McGraw, W8BTM, got the okay from the Colerain Township Board of Zoning Appeals (BZA) to erect a 48-foot tower on his property.

"It all started with Hank Greeb, N8XX, who organized the ham radio community, researched the applicable laws and fully utilized all ARRL resources all toward achieving this victory," Ohio Section Manager Joe Phillips, K8QOE, said of the W8BTM case. "More than anything else, it was Hank's single commitment to see this through that made this a win for ham radio." Greeb serves as an ARRL Volunteer Consulting Engineer in the Great Lakes Division.

More than two dozen neighbors had signed a petition and presented their opposition at the hearing in early December. Thirty radio amateurs showed up for the session, and many spoke in support of McGraw's application. In addition, ARRL Great Lakes Division Director Jim Weaver, K8JE, supplied applicable case law for the hearing, while Ohio Assistant SM Bob Winston, W2THU, offered legal advice. Professional engineer Herb Nichols, W8HRN, twice testified to the technical aspects of McGraw's plans, Phillips said. The BZA's December 15 decision was unanimous.

Greeb said the township's lawyer advised that the BZA was not the proper forum to consider McGraw's application and that guidance must come instead from the trustees. He suggested that the trustees need to develop guidelines regarding permissible structure heights for future applications. None exist in the Rural Zoning Commission's regulations, which provide the basis for Colerain Township's zoning regulations.

"While it is a bit unclear as to how the township will proceed," Greeb commented, "we look forward to working with its elected officials and its designees to set guidance in the new zoning regulations, which are currently under consideration by the township."

In Illinois, Siepmann's application for a 65-foot free-standing structure faced opposition from his neighbors, who apparently feared that the presence of the antenna support structure would lower property values and lead to TV and telephone interference.

"This permit was issued in spite of a 100-plus neighbor signature 12-point petition to the city not to allow the tower, as well as the erection of approximately 75 neighbor lawn signs with 'NO RADIO TOWER' emblazoned across their faces," Siepmann told ARRL. "The signs were placed on lawns as far away as one mile from our home, which is in a quiet, mature and leafy subdivision in Wheaton." Representing Siepmann was ARRL Volunteer Counsel and well-known Amateur Radio antenna advocate Jim O'Connell, W9WU.

According to news reports in the Chicago Daily Herald and the Chicago Tribune, City Attorney Jim Knippen told city council members December 6 that because of PRB-1, Wheaton would lose any court case and had no choice but to issue Siepmann a permit for his tower. The city compromised on its height, however. O'Connell says the city came up with 42 feet by adding Wheaton's present 12-foot "Over the Air Television Receiving Dish" (OTARD) antenna height limit to its 30-foot height limit for a single-family dwelling. O'Connell says a number of short towers already are in place in Wheaton, and the city even had a 65-foot antenna tower ordinance until several years ago, when it "simply disappeared one day."

Siepmann--who jokes that his call sign suffix stands for "no antenna"--says he hopes 42 feet will prove sufficient for his needs but adds, "that will have to be determined." For now, he's looking forward to warmer weather to dig the hole for the base and erect his antenna system.

Response & Recovery

Urban Search & Rescue (US&R)

Urban search-and-rescue is considered a "multi-hazard" discipline, as it may be needed for a variety of emergencies or disasters, including earthquakes, hurricanes, typhoons, storms and tornadoes, floods, dam failures, technological accidents, terrorist activities, and hazardous materials releases. The events may be slow in developing, as in the case of hurricanes, or sudden, as in the case of earthquakes.

For more information, please visit the Urban Search & Rescue section of FEMA's website.

Planning & Prevention

National Response Plan

"One team, one goal...a safer, more secure America"

The National Response Plan establishes a comprehensive all-hazards approach to enhance the ability of the United States to manage domestic incidents. The plan incorporates best practices and procedures from incident management disciplines-homeland security, emergency management, law enforcement, firefighting, public works, public health, responder and recovery worker health and safety, emergency medical services, and the private sector-and integrates them into a unified structure. It forms the basis of how the federal government coordinates with state, local, and tribal governments and the private sector during incidents. It establishes protocols to help a.. Save lives and protect the health and safety of the public, responders, and recovery workers;

b.. Ensure security of the homeland;
c.. Prevent an imminent incident, including acts of terrorism, from occurring;
d.. Protect and restore critical infrastructure and key resources;
e.. Conduct law enforcement investigations to resolve the incident, apprehend the perpetrators, and collect and preserve evidence for prosecution and/or attribution;
f.. Protect property and mitigate damages and impacts to individuals, communities, and the environment; and g.. Facilitate recovery of individuals, families, businesses, governments, and the environment.

Information on Product Changes

The following changes and additions are being made to several products. The information here is mainly geared toward the media, weather vendors, webmasters, etc. If you have any questions about these, you may contact Chris Miller, our Warning Coordination Meteorologist.

Format Changes for the Severe Weather Statement (WWUS53 KILX) and Flash Flood Statement (WGUS73 KILX)
Effective Date: December 8, 2004

This change was implemented in December, but is presented here as a reminder, with severe weather season soon coming up. With the implementation of NWS Instructions 10-511 and 10-922, the Severe Weather Statement (SVS) and Flash Flood Statement (FFS) products were divided into a "segmented" format, similar to the Zone Forecast Product and the Short Term Forecast. This involved the following:

a.. The Universal Generic Code (UGC) string, previously located above the Mass News Dissemination (MND) header, will now be below it.
b.. If more than one group is included in the product, the remaining segments will be listed below the previous segments, each separated by "$$".
This change was made to help distinguish events which may cause different types of weather across the forecast area. It will be most useful when a portion of a warning is canceled (e.g. removing one county from a 2-county warning).

For example:

Effective Date: February 22, 2005

Effective on February 22, the Areal Outline product (AWIPS header CHISLSIL, FOS header WWUS63 KLOT) will be discontinued. This is part of a plan to change the listings of counties affected by Severe Thunderstorm or Tornado Watches to be issued by individual NWS offices, instead of a single listing for the entire state.

The county listings will be available under the following headers:

FOS Header: WOUS64 KWNS
AWIPS Header: WOU# (# is last digit of watch number)

This product, called the "Watch Outline Update" (WOU), is issued by the Storm Prediction Center (SPC) in Norman, OK. It lists all counties affected by the watch, broken up by state. Counties affected are coded using the "C" (county) form of the Universal Generic Code (UGC). The initial WOU is issued after the SPC coordinates with the NWS offices in the affected areas, to determine the specific counties that are to be included in the watch. Another WOU is issued after the watch has expired, or has been completely canceled.

In between, WOU's will be issued hourly on an experimental basis. These experimental WOU's will contain updates to remove counties from the watch. At the present time, removing counties is still officially done via the Special Weather Statement (WWUS83 KILX) header. Eventually, the use of the Special Weather Statement for this purpose will be phased out.

FOS/WMO Header: WWUS63 KILX
AWIPS Header: CHIWCNILX

This product, the "Watch County Notification" (WCN), is currently considered "experimental", but will be issued during actual severe weather events. During severe thunderstorm and tornado watches, this product will be issued to indicate which counties are included in the watch, which ones have been removed, or if an short extension to a watch is being issued. The WCN will be used as input for the experimental WOU updates. The WCN is expected to become an operational product after the 2005 severe weather season.

Implementation of Valid Time Event Code
Effective Date: February 8, 2005

The Valid Time Event Code (VTEC) will make its official debut in several Lincoln NWS products on February 8:

a.. Tornado Warning (WFUS53 KILX)
b.. Severe Thunderstorm Warning (WUUS53 KILX)

c.. Severe Weather Statement (WWUS53 KILX)
VTEC is used in conjuction with the Universal Generic Code (UGC). It contains additional coding to indicate starting and ending times of specific events, cancellations, upgrades, etc. Such coding can be used by weather providers and vendors to further automate the distribution of messages (e.g. TV screen crawls, paging systems, etc.).

An example of the coding string follows:

WWUS53 KILX 161200
SVSILX

SEVERE WEATHER STATEMENT

KNOX-
600 AM CST SUN JAN 16 2005

http://www.nws.noaa.gov/om/vtec/

Eventually, VTEC will be used in other products such as flood warnings and statements, winter weather messages, etc. Testing of VTEC in these products will continue much of this year; implementation will be announced at a later date.

122. State law mandates new training for 911 dispatchers

State law mandates new training for 911 dispatchers

By AMANY ALI - Tribune City Editor
Indiana state law will soon change the way 911 dispatchers help callers with medical emergencies.

According to New Albany Fire Department Major Tim Kron, the state law will change beginning July 1, regarding how 911 dispatchers respond once they send out ambulances throughout the state. Those dispatchers will have to be trained as Emergency Medical Dispatchers (EMD). That training will enable dispatchers to give what could be life-saving aid on a step-by-step basis via the telephone until an ambulance arrives at a scene. Kron said dispatchers will not have to memorize the variety of methods of aid. Instead, they will have a set series of questions to ask in a manual, and a set of responses that will depend on the caller's answers. They will also have written instructions on how to help callers with their emergencies.

"It will save lives," Kron said. "It may not be in the first month, or the first year."

The certification will also enable dispatchers to have the ability to divert an ambulance run from a less-urgent to a more urgent run.

As part of the new law, dispatch centers will have to have an EMD director on staff. That person will give medical advice, periodically review dispatchers' work to ensure they are following procedure and to keep up with guidelines and new medical information.

The dispatchers will have to initially be trained and then renew their certification every two years. Kron has been working with New Albany Police Capt. Rick Denny to find a firm to train dispatchers. Depending on who is chosen, Kron said the training could take two or three days, and could cost about $200 to $250 per person. The city, which has 11 dispatchers, and county, which has 10 dispatchers, would be responsible for the cost of the initial training. Floyd County Police Chief Frank Loop said the city and county dispatchers will likely train together, and he hopes the cost will be paid through the Local Emergency Planning Committee Fund.

Loop said the training will be a benefit to all involved. He said it will enable dispatchers the opportunity to help those in emergencies with procedures to try until medical help arrives.

"With more training, it should relieve their stress," Loop said of dispatchers. "It should also relieve the stress of the caller."

New Albany city dispatchers Myrtle Brown and Wesley Perryman have been EMD certified. However, Brown said their certification was not renewed in the last year. Therefore, they will have to be retrained. Brown said the additional training will be of great service to dispatchers.

"If you're EMD trained, then you know you did everything you could to help," Brown, who was a New Albany Auxiliary officer for seven years and is a first aid responder, CPR certified and bloodborn pathogens certified, said.

Instead of adding stress, Brown said the training will relieve stress. In particular, she said it will be a help that dispatchers will be able to give help from an on-hand manual.

Kron said the rules that govern the new law are still being drafted. He said the completed draft should be complete and ready for Gov. Mitch Daniels' signature in September or October.

125. Interference To Their Garage Door Opener Controls Near Military Bases

PUBLIC NOTICE Federal Communications Commission 445 12 th St., S. W. Washington, D. C. 20554 News Media Information 202 / 418- 0500 Internet: http:// www. fcc. gov TTY: 1- 888- 835- 5322

Consumers May Experience Interference To Their Garage Door Opener Controls Near Military Bases
Consumers near certain military installations have recently experienced interference to their garage door opener controls that may reduce the operating distance or cause the device to stop operating. This public notice is issued to explain the cause of the interference and the steps being taken to alleviate this problem. The vast majority of consumers will not experience any interference to their garage door opener controls.
Garage door openers operate, legally under Part 15 of the Commissions rules, at very low power on an "unlicensed basis," and have been permitted to operate on frequencies that have been reserved for the federal government since WWII for air/ ground communications systems, but received limited use by the government for many years. As unlicensed devices, there is no right to protection from interference. However, because of this limited use, the risk of interference was similarly limited, so manufacturers of garage door openers chose these frequencies for their transmit and receive devices. In response to the increased needs of homeland security, the Department of Defense now must make more use of these frequencies to deploy new mobile radio systems on and around certain military bases.
Some consumers near these bases may experience interference to their garage door openers that can reduce operating range or cause the remote control to cease functioning. This interference will not cause the garage doors to open or close on their own. Inside the garage, wall- mounted push buttons will not be affected by any interference that might occur, and will continue to operate normally.
It is not possible to predict in advance which specific users or locations near military bases may experience interference, because of the variety of technical characteristics of garage door controls and configuration of the mobile radio systems. The Department of Defense is working with the National Telecommunications and Information Administration to make reasonable effort consistent with their mission requirements, and the Federal Communications Commission is working with the garage door opener industry to make every effort on their part, to minimize the impact to consumers.
For security reasons, the Department of Defense cannot make information broadly available in advance as to the deployment of the new mobile radio systems. Individual base commanders may make some information available to their local communities when appropriate.

Garage door opener manufacturers stand ready to help consumers resolve any interference to their systems, including, in some cases, making available for purchase, a replacement transmitter and receiver that operate on a different frequency that is not used by the new mobile radio systems.

Consumers experiencing interference should contact the manufacturer of the door opener control or their local installer for information on available immediate solutions.
For further information on this Public Notice, please contact the FCC Call Center at 1-888- CALL- FCC (1- 888- 225- 5322).

Illinois State Police Target Tri-State Speeders

POSTED: 8:57 am CST March 4, 2005

CHICAGO -- Illinois State Police plan a crackdown on the Tri-State that's designed to improve safety on the tollway.

On Friday, the state police plan to put more than 25 squad cars on the 77-mile stretch of highway that runs from Wisconsin to Indiana to target speeders and other unsafe drivers.

State police spokesman Doug Whitmore says the Tri-State will be the focus tomorrow, but other tollways will be blitzed later this year.

The enforcement detail will run from seven a-m to three p-m, and motorists should expect to see a trooper every five miles.

Whitmore says the crackdown could slow traffic during the morning rush hour but that's worth it if safety is improved.

The PRO-2096 is a DIN-E size radio and comes with the equipment necessary for a beautiful in-dash installation of the scanner (in locations typically reserved for CD players and the like). The PRO-96 portable is a handsomely designed handheld.

Both scanners offer a full-graphics alpha-numeric display, easy programming and text entry, Motorola and EDACS® trunking, CTCSS/DCS decode and programming, Weather Alert with SAME/FIPS codes, attenuation option, backlit keypad, firmware upgradeable from the Radio Shack web site, serial interface for PC programming and cloning (cable and software available separately), 500 channel and 1500 talkgroup ID memories, and much more.

Not only is the digital audio quality on these scanners outstanding, but they also are C4FM/C-QPSK which means that they will work perfectly with all (non-encrypted) APCO-25 digital systems, both 3600 and 9600 baud trunking control channel as well as non-trunked digital.

Finally both scanners include the unique V-Folder memory system. Dozens of metro areas are shipped pre-programmed into the scanner (representing the top 100 trunked systems in the nation). You can download these systems into the radio easily -- great for home or travel use.

As soon as I send an email out detailing FCC databases, they go and change them.

Some of the regular ULS databases pages have changed looks, but appear to have the same functionality.

NEW Application Search Links are:

Application Search:
http://wireless2.fcc.gov/UlsApp/ApplicationSearch/searchAppl.jsp

Advanced Application Search http://wireless2.fcc.gov/UlsApp/ApplicationSearch/searchAdvanced.jsp

The old link of http://wtbwww05.fcc.gov/default.sph/UlsQueryApp.exe?FNC=query_type__Ahome_html Does not work any more (well at least not today)

There may not be as much info available on these now. Still investigating.
BUT you can now MAP an application which you could not do before.
Can not get the REFERENCE copy to work.

HeaderDear Robert:

Thank you for contacting me with your opinion on the National Weather Service Act of 2005 (S.786). The weather affects our everyday lives regardless of severity, and the National Weather Service (NWS) does an excellent job notifying the public about what they can expect on a day-to-day basis from Mother Nature.

As you may know, the NWS was created 135 years ago to forecast the weather and provide warnings to protect life and property. It has evolved into a national meteorological database that can be accessed by other government agencies, the private sector, the public and the global community.

I agree that the National Weather Service Act of 2005 would unduly limit information provided by the NWS. This Act seeks to focus the NWS solely on alerting the public to severe weather conditions. This would remove the NWS as a source for general weather broadcasts, essentially allowing only private companies to compete over this service.

The Act is currently being considered in the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science and Transportation. I do not serve on this panel, but I will discuss your concerns with my colleagues who do.

Please donâ?Tt hesitate to contact me in the future on this or any issue of concern.

Sincerely,

Barack Obama
United States Senator

141. Indiana Working to Get State Police off Riverboats

ASSOCIATED PRESS

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) -- State regulators are working to get state police troopers off riverboat casinos and back to traditional patrols, and new gaming commission agents will perform their old duties.

New legislation passed this year by the General Assembly allows the change.

''If we are able to get 100 well-trained officers back to what I consider more important law enforcement work, I think that's a big plus for the citizens of the state,'' Gov. Mitch Daniels said.

About 120 state police officers work either on the boats or doing investigations and background checks for the Indiana Gaming Commission. Under the new system, the gaming commission will have its own staff of agents.

The salaries and benefits of the troopers top $6.8 million annually, according to the Legislative Services Agency.

The casinos reimburse the state police that money, but Daniels said the state has been undercharging the boats for some of the administrative and investigative costs.

Now, the cost of the new gaming commission agents will be reimbursed by the boats. Daniels said he expected a cost savings for the state.

Gaming commission executive director Ernest Yelton said the change will mean more specially trained enforcement agents at the casinos. But he said it is too soon to know when the commission will have its own team of enforcement agents ready for work.

Yelton said there will be fewer gaming agents than there were troopers on the boats.

Also, the new gaming agents will not have police cars, which could mean more savings.

The state troopers currently assigned to the gaming commission will be allowed to apply for the new jobs, or they can return to traditional state police duties.

Daniels said that will be a help to a force that has dwindled to about 400 troopers on the road.

Autopsy findings not released
ISP investigate death of Versailles fire chief Wanda English Burnett - Editor

According to information from the police, Purvis was found dead at his residence, 2511 West County Road 50 South, Versailles, on Tuesday evening, June 14.

Sgt. Randy Holt of the Ripley County Sheriff's Department had gone to the Purvis residence about 6:18 p.m. to serve court papers when he notice a burning smell coming from the home. He immediately contacted the Versailles Fire Department. The body of Purvis was discovered inside.

An autopsy was completed on Wednesday, June 15. However, according to Ripley County Coroner Eric Karsteter, "findings of the autopsy have not been released."

The Indiana State Police are being assisted in the investigation by officials from the Indiana Fire Marshal's Office, Roger Johnson, Rick Constable, and Bob Dean. Also assisting with the investigation are officers from the Ripley County Sheriff's Department, Ripley County Deputy Coroner, Eric Karsteter, members of the Osgood and Versailles volunteer fire departments.

Services for Purvis are pending at the Stratton-Karsteter Funeral Home, Versailles.

Purvis was currently the Fire Chief of the Versailles Volunteer Fire Department where he had been involved since he was 14 years old. He held a number of certifications through the fire department and was active at the state level. He was a member of the Ripley County Fire Chiefs Association, the Indiana Fire Chiefs Association, had been a member of Rescue 69 where he served on the board of directors and former member of Task Unit One.

Described as a "great leader for the department" Purvis was instru mental in obtaining a number of grants to upgrade the fire department and serve the community. "Richard worked hard to get his guys the best training possible and to make sure they had the equipment to do their job to the best of their ability," noted Lt. Chuck Gunter, who had worked alongside Purvis for a number of years. "Richard was a hard working man and will be sadly missed. Our department and community lost a great asset and a lot of knowledge with his death," he concluded.

Police to Escort Slow-Moving Transport

Police plan to escort a large empty metal container from a plant in southwestern Indiana into Illinois today.

Police say it could cause major traffic delays.

The Indiana State Police warn motorists to expect disruption of Interstate 64, Indiana 69 and Indiana 66 traffic all day.

The load will be moving from BMX Technologies plant in Mount Vernon, 20 miles west of Evansville. BMX makes containers for nuclear reactors and other energy-related equipment.

Indiana State Police said the vessel will be moved at an "extremely slow" pace.

Illinois State Police says there's no information to release about the vessel's destination.

this is a shot in the dark but it could be because all of the other freqs are for low power, fire ground, use only. Meaning unless you were right on top of them they comms would probably be too weak to

Mosquitoes In Vienna, IL Test Positive For West Nile created: 6/14/2005 8:44:48 AM updated: 6/14/2005 3:34:19 PM

VIENNA, Ill. (AP) -- State health officials say a mosquito sample collected in the southern Illinois community of Vienna has tested positive for West Nile virus.

The Illinois Department of Public Health reports that the infected mosquito sample was found in Johnson County on June Third. It's the fourth sample confirmed positive for West Nile since surveillance for the mosquito-borne disease began on May 1.

So far this year, no human cases of West Nile have been reported in Illinois. Two birds, however, have been confirmed positive for the virus.

Last year, 60 people were confirmed to have contracted West Nile and four of them died.

In 2002, Illinois led the nation with 884 human cases, including 66 deaths.

The virus is transmitted to people through mosquito bites.

RadioReference.com News and Updates for June 26th, 2005

Dear RadioReference.com Member,

The summer is upon us and lots of changes are in store for RadioReference.com over the next few months. Please take a moment to read through this news to see what is happening at RadioReference.com.

Recent News and Updates Regarding RadioReference.com

What has been updated and fixed in the past few months?

a.. FCC license integration on each county page, showing the last 20 issued amd updated licenses in the county. This will help you keep track of new licenses in each of your counties.
b.. Google Maps integration of FCC License data. Now you can easily map the location of all transmitters for an FCC license. See this example FCC license for a demo.
c.. The Radio Reference Web Service. We have "exposed" the RadioReference.com database as an XML Web service, enabling software developers to write applications that can automatically download data from the database. Remember that you must be a donating user of RadioReference.com to use the Web service, and any software applications using the Web service will prompt you for your RadioReference.com username and password. As of now, the following software applications are today currently utilizing the RadioReference.com Web service:
a.. Win96 supports the Web service allowing you to download trunked system information directly into Win96 for easy programming of the PRO-2096/PRO-96 Radio Shack scanners.
b.. Butel software applications - now support the Web service using a new download application. You can download and access the converter here.
c.. RRDB Reader reads from the RadioReference.com Web service and writes a Uniden UASD file. (You need to be a member of the BC246T Yahoo group to download) d.. The new UniTrunker trunking decoder application can automatically download trunking information for many systems.
d.. We removed the requirement to be a registered user to see data in the database. However, we do require you to be a donating member to access many of the special reporting functions of the site.
e.. A new help desk function to provide better assistance with using the site.
f.. Numerous updates and bug fixes have been rolled out to facilitate easier management and viewing of the data on the site.
What future enhancements are coming to RadioReference.com? Here is a list of what the we are working on:

a.. PDF reports for FCC data and conventional radio data in the database are almost completed.
b.. Conventional and FCC radio data available via the Web service.

c.. Email alerts for updated information. When something is updated you are interested in, we will automatically send you an email.
d.. Better search interface for all radio communications frequency data (ongoing).
e.. Changing user forums software (see next).
Changes to the User Forums Coming -- Moving to Vbulletin

In the next few weeks, we will be upgrading the user forums to Vbulletin, a much more feature rich and robust user forum software. The version of phpbb that we currently run has proven to be problematic and not able to handle the load of our current user base. With this in mind, members will need to prepare for the changeover in the following ways:

a.. Save your avatar (the picture by your name). You will need to re-upload this picture when we make the transition.
b.. Save your signature, it may not make the transition properly.
All of your posts, threads, and private messages will be transitioned over without any involvement from you. We are currently in the finishing phases of testing, so watch for news and updates regarding the changeover.

Donations and Value Added Features

Remember, RadioReference.com is a free service to everyone, however the expenses of the site are supported by donating contributors. The information provided on RadioReference.com is collected from the thousands of users that voluntarily send in information, and therefore we do not ever intend to charge money to access the information in the database. Simple access to all frequency and trunked system information will always remain free. That policy will never, ever change.

We will however, continue roll out value added features that help provide better reporting and user convenience functions to individuals who donate money to the site. The Web service is a great example of this. Remember, the management and upkeep of the site requires significant financial and time resources, and support from the members is greatly needed. Those that support the site with a monetary contribution will get numerous extra value added services.

For information on donations and to review the list of value added services to donating users, see the Radio Reference Donations Page. We ask for your help and assistance in keeping this great resource running smoothly.

User Submissions and the Administrators

Hats off to the database administration team for their outstanding effort in processing submissions, and most importantly, many thanks to all the contributors of detailed frequency information to the site. The administration staff currently consists of 60 individuals all over the world who are recognized experts in their local areas, and volunteer their time to manage the number of submissions that are received from the visitors. They are the lifeblood of the site, and work extremely hard to keep the data in the database up-to-date and consistent.

Some of the things that we are looking for to get the database in even better shape are the following:

a.. Airport Frequency information for the largest airports. Many airports do not have information yet in the database.

b.. Local Attraction information, such as water parks, amusement parks, and stadiums.
If you have any information that you can contribute to the site, please use the submission engine to submit your local frequency and trunked system information directly to the the database administrators. Don't sit on it, share it with your fellow hobbyists! Also take a moment to view the submission guidelines document put together by the administration staff describing some rules of thumb for submitting information to RadioReference.com.

Surge in crashes scars air ambulance industry
By Alan Levin and Robert Davis, USA TODAY
The helicopter flight to take heart patient Jerry Leonard from one Indiana hospital to another should have been routine.

Crewmembers survived this April 2004 crash near Boonville , Ind., but the patient, Jerry Leonard, died.
By Bob Self, Florida Times-Union via AP

But on the night of the trip, April 20, 2004, the pilot on the Air Evac Lifeteam air ambulance apparently forgot to adjust the helicopter's altimeter, federal records show. When he slammed the helicopter carrying Leonard into a hillside near Boonville, Ind., the cockpit gauge showed he was 310 feet off the ground.

"Boy, I screwed up," pilot Richard Larock told an emergency worker who responded to the crash.

Larock and two medical workers survived, but Leonard — 63 years old and strapped to a gurney — was flung from the helicopter, the stretcher strap forced against his throat. "It took 10 minutes for him to strangle to death," says his son, Keith Leonard.

The flight that was supposed to help save Leonard's life killed him instead.

A deadly trend of pilot errors, industry carelessness and poor government oversight has driven the number of air ambulance crashes to record levels. (Related story: Inexperience proves fatal)

Since 2000, 60 people have died in 84 crashes — more than double the number of crashes during the previous five years. During that period, more than 10% of the U.S. air ambulance helicopter fleet crashed. If commercial airlines lost the same proportion of large passenger jets as air ambulance companies lost helicopters, 90 airliners would crash each year.

Despite the surge in the number of crashes, however, air ambulance companies and the federal agency that oversees them failed time and again to take steps that might have averted tragedy and saved lives, a USA TODAY investigation shows.

The newspaper reviewed hundreds of pages of documents and interviewed dozens of pilots, aviation experts, federal officials, and executives with the companies that operate the flights. Because government statistics on air ambulance crashes are sparse, USA TODAY also created its own database of 275 accidents since 1978.

Unlike passengers on commercial jets, the people being transported by air ambulances — many critically ill or injured in accidents far from hospitals — had no choice but to make the flights.

The crashes that killed them often involved egregious errors by pilots and crew. In one case, a helicopter carrying an 11-day-old child and her mother slammed into the side of a mountain at night. In other crashes, pilots flew into thick fog even after other air ambulance pilots had refused to fly.

"This isn't search and rescue," says Jamie Lebovitz, the lawyer representing the Leonard family. "This is transport and kill."

Reports detail crashes

Accident reports by the National Transportation Safety Board read like a horrifying guide for how not to fly.

Among the crashes:

On March 10, 2000, a pilot charged with taking a sick infant to a Texas hospital lifted off in fog so thick that an ambulance driver and others on the ground quickly lost sight of the helicopter. The pilot's employer, Temsco Helicopters Inc., forbade flying in such conditions, which require instruments to navigate, according to the NTSB. The pilot had only one hour of instrument experience. The helicopter crashed less than a mile away, killing all four people aboard.

On Aug. 26, 2002, medical workers on a Rocky Mountain Helicopters mission fled a burning helicopter after a crash landing without evacuating the patient — a baby with respiratory problems. The pilot had landed on a highway in Bradenton, Fla., after the helicopter's engine caught fire. The pilot and three medical crewmembers fled. The pilot told investigators that he saw the baby after returning to fight the fire, and he rescued the child.

On July 13, 2004, a Med-Trans Corp. helicopter flew to a highway accident in Newberry, S.C., after three other helicopter companies turned the job down because mist and fog blanketed the area. Seconds after taking off with the patient, the helicopter struck nearby trees and crashed. All four people aboard died.

On Aug. 21, 2004, an Access Air Ambulance flight carrying an 11-day-old infant and her mother to a Reno hospital slammed into a mountainside in a remote area of northern Nevada. The pilot was following a well-traveled route over a mountain range on a moonless night but didn't climb high enough. All five people aboard died.

On Oct. 20, 2004, a helicopter left Santa Rosa Beach, Fla., to pick up a patient at a hospital in De Funiak Springs, Fla., even though a nearby weather station reported low visibility, according to preliminary findings by the NTSB. The company, Metro Aviation Inc., was not certified to fly in such conditions. After only two minutes, the pilot radioed that he was attempting to return because of bad weather. The helicopter crashed into a bay, killing the pilot and two medical workers.

Contributing: By Alan Levin

The newspaper's investigation found that:

• Industry safeguards are so lax that pilots have repeatedly caused accidents by knowingly flying into bad weather, failing to check weather conditions or otherwise violating federal or company regulations. In at least 17 cases since 1995, pilots crashed after flouting fundamental flight rules. (Related story: Pilots pressure themselves to fly)

• Despite at least nine crashes since 2003 in which a disoriented pilot flew into the ground, federal regulations exempt helicopters from some of the most basic safety standards and equipment required for commercial airlines, including devices that warn pilots when they get too close to the ground.

• Government inspections of air ambulance operations, a process critical to holding companies accountable for safety, are haphazard and inadequate. A draft report by a Federal Aviation Administration task force that studied the crashes last year concluded that inspections are "hit-or-miss" and that some accidents were "partly attributable" to poorly trained inspectors. In three fatal crashes last year, FAA inspectors had never visited helicopter bases to check pilot credentials, maintenance records and other documentation, steps crucial to ensuring safe flight.

Dueling viewpoints

Some medical studies also question the need for many air ambulance flights. A 2002 study in The Journal of Trauma found that helicopters were used "excessively" for patients who weren't severely injured, and often didn't get patients to the hospital faster than ground ambulances.

One possible explanation for the alleged overuse: profit. Air ambulance firms receive roughly $7,500 per flight from insurance companies or Medicare.

But industry leaders cite other studies to show that thousands of lives are saved each year by speedy flights to hospitals — far more than are lost in crashes. A study this year in the Air Medical Journal found that states with better air ambulance coverage tended to have lower highway fatality rates. "We do this because there are benefits," says Tom Judge, president of the Association of Air Medical Services, the industry's trade group.

Pilots sometimes find themselves in particularly trying situations. Despite darkness or bad weather, they may be summoned to accident scenes. They aren't supposed to take off in poor conditions, but their decision whether to fly could mean life or death.

"I don't know anybody in this industry who isn't dedicated to safety and dedicated to what we do," says Ron Fergie, president of the National EMS Pilots Association.

FAA and industry officials say they are moving to improve safety. Among the steps: encouraging companies to buy night-vision goggles, which allow pilots to see hazards in the dark, when the majority of crashes occur.

The FAA also has worked with companies to develop procedures to help pilots decide whether to stay on the ground in dangerous conditions. The agency pledges to review safety standards at every air ambulance company this summer. And industry trade groups say many companies are improving training without waiting for mandates by the FAA.

"We take this very seriously," says Jim Ballough, who oversees the FAA's safety effort. "The public will see change."

But in the face of industry concerns about cost, many of the most promising safety enhancements have not been required. Flight regulations have not been rewritten. The FAA hasn't followed key safety recommendations it received from its own task force last December. And though safety reviews of companies are planned, Ballough concedes the agency still lacks a system to ensure that all air ambulance bases — especially those located far from their companies' headquarters — are inspected.

In interviews, the FAA offered no explanation for why it failed to act earlier or devote more resources to monitoring the air ambulance industry. But the upswing in crashes occurred as the agency faced growing pressure to tighten oversight of large airlines after the crashes of a ValuJet flight in Florida in 1996 and an Alaska Airlines jet in California in 2000.

The failure to act, by the industry and the government, is "almost criminal," says Vernon Albert, a former air ambulance company flight director who is now a safety consultant. "Someone needs to be uncomfortable," Albert says, "and not the guy riding in the back of the helicopter."

'We don't know what happened'

When Jerry Leonard was killed as a result of the Boonville, Ind., crash last year, "it was just like somebody driving a knife through your heart," Keith Leonard says.

The Leonard family had driven to Deaconess Hospital in Evansville, Ind., to meet Leonard, who was having heart problems. He was being airlifted there from a hospital in Huntingburg, Ind., 40 miles away. Leonard never arrived.

The family "believed that this air ambulance, with a pilot and paramedic and nurse, were going to provide him with state-of-the art care and deliver him safely to a hospital," says Lebovitz, the family's lawyer.

AP
Jerry Leonard

"And the company violated that trust. They breached that trust."

Air Evac declined to comment on the accident, but spokeswoman Julie Heavrin says the company has taken several actions to improve safety, including buying a helicopter flight simulator for training.

Across the industry, however, mistakes by pilots remain the cause of the overwhelming majority of crashes. The newspaper's analysis of almost 30 years worth of accidents shows that 82% of fatal crashes were caused by human error — almost all by pilots.

In 2000, the air ambulance trade group called on the FAA to push companies to emulate the type of training used by airlines to minimize mistakes. Known at airlines as "Crew Resource Management," the training teaches pilots to listen to concerns from other crewmembers and to monitor themselves for factors such as fatigue and tension.

In July 2000, an industry committee suggested language for such a training program and sent it to Jane Garvey, the FAA's administrator at the time, says J. Heffernan, an air ambulance company official who headed the effort.

"We don't know what happened after that," Heffernan says.

Some companies went ahead with the training program, but it was never endorsed or addressed by the FAA. Agency spokeswoman Alison Duquette says the FAA found no record that it even received the industry's recommendations.

No one can say for sure whether the industry's suggested safety program would have prevented air ambulance crashes if it had been instituted industrywide. But similar programs at airlines are credited with reducing accident rates.

Today, about five years and dozens of crashes after the industry first proposed the safety program, the FAA is preparing to formally endorse it.

A proposal within the FAA to gather more data on how many hours air ambulance firms fly also went nowhere. As a consequence, tracking the accident rate — that is, how often air ambulances crash compared with the number of flight hours — remains impossible.

The collection of more and better data about accidents is the basis for taking steps to improve safety, says Michael Barr, lead instructor for the University of Southern California's aviation safety program. "If the government wants to make any kind of rule changes, they have to base that on hard data," Barr says. "They need to show that there is a need and make it a factual presentation, not an emotional one."

In a statement in response to the newspaper's questions, the FAA says it doesn't need to track the hours of air ambulance flights. "We know the causes for these accidents and know what intervention strategies are needed," the statement says.

The air ambulance industry has stopped waiting for the FAA to act. It now has begun gathering that flight information itself.

'Safety layers don't exist'

Pilot Craig Bingham knew the weather was bad on Jan. 10, 2003. Fog had reduced visibility to one-sixteenth of a mile in parts of Salt Lake City. A pilot from another air ambulance firm had even called to warn him against flying, federal records show.

But Bingham took off anyway, hoping to rescue a motorist injured on the highway.

The veteran pilot apparently became disoriented in the fog and crashed into a field, federal records show. The accident killed Bingham and a paramedic. A flight nurse was severely injured.

The unique mission of the air ambulance industry has contributed to the difficulty of preventing crashes.

Unlike charter or airline flights that go into airports, air ambulances land on hospital roofs or, worse, by the sides of rural roads at night. And instead of delivering anonymous airline passengers, air ambulance pilots are charged with helping save lives. That mission can prompt pilots to press on in conditions when others might turn back.

"Most of the accidents will say 'pilot error.' It's not so simple, really," says Eileen Frazer, executive director of the Commission on Accreditation of Medical Transport Systems, a non-profit group that conducts safety audits of air ambulance firms. "There are all sorts of extenuating circumstances."

Airlines and safety regulators have conducted a decades-long battle against pilot mistakes by improving training, oversight and technology. The combination has led to the safest period in commercial aviation history.

But almost none of those improvements have been applied to the air ambulance industry:

• About two-thirds of fatal air ambulance crashes occur in poor visibility, the newspaper's analysis shows. Even so, pilots are not required to have special training about what to do when they encounter fog, snow or darkness.

• Air ambulance pilots need not obtain a weather report for their destination if they are not carrying a patient. Similarly, FAA rules that restrict how many hours pilots may work do not apply to flights without a patient.

• Helicopters are exempt from the federal rules that require data recorders on most planes that carry people for hire. The lack of these recorders in air ambulance helicopters makes it more difficult to determine what caused accidents — and to prevent future crashes.

Patrick Veillette, a former emergency medical pilot who has written several studies of air ambulance accidents, says the lack of emphasis on safety regulations, equipment and training is "setting the pilots up."

Veillette now flies a business jet. He says the contrast between that type of flying and the air ambulance world is stark. In a jet, air traffic controllers guide him away from hazardous conditions. His cockpit is equipped with the latest safety devices, including one that sounds an alarm if he strays too near to the ground. A company dispatcher won't allow him to take off unless conditions are safe.

For the air ambulance industry, "these multiple safety layers don't exist," he says.

Inspections 'hit or miss'

No one was seriously hurt on Aug. 31, 2002, when an Air Methods Inc. helicopter clipped a parking garage as it tried to take off at Miami Children's Hospital.

But an investigation of the accident revealed the lack of oversight that occurs at many air ambulance bases, particularly those far from company headquarters.

The FAA had never inspected the helicopter operation because it was new, the National Transportation Safety Board found. Construction at the hospital had rendered the heliport dangerous, but the hospital had never told state and federal officials of the changes.

And even though flying into the hospital was tricky, Air Methods had not provided the pilots any special training, the copilot told NTSB investigators. The copilot, who wasn't named in the NTSB's accident report, said company managers told him they knew it was "tight in there, but to deal with it since they needed the work."

Air Methods CEO Aaron Todd says the company would "never accept a contract" that it could not perform safely.

Regardless, the case illustrates how FAA inspectors have been unable to keep up with the dramatic growth in the air ambulance industry. Air ambulance companies have expanded rapidly since the late 1990s as firms began competing in urban areas and demand for air ambulance services surged in rural areas where hospitals had shut down.

The industry's trade group estimates that, since 2000, the number of air ambulance helicopters has climbed 50%, from 500 to about 750. The average number of crashes climbed even faster, from about five per year during the early and mid 1990s to more than 15 per year since 2000 — a 200% increase.

After investigating three of the worst air ambulance crashes last year, two involving Med-Trans Corp. helicopters, the NTSB found that FAA inspectors had never visited each of their local operations.

The NTSB is investigating pilot decisions in all three accidents, says Jeff Guzzetti, who oversees the NTSB's air ambulance crash investigations. Eleven people died in the crashes, including two patients and the mother of one patient.

In one case, a Med-Trans crew flew to a roadside accident in South Carolina on July 13, 2004, after three other crews declined the mission because of bad weather. In another crash, a preliminary NTSB investigation shows that a pilot flew into a storm near Peyote, Texas, on March 21, 2004, after failing to check the weather, Guzzetti says.

Med-Trans spokesman Reid Vogel calls the company's crews "highly skilled" and committed to safety.

A rapidly growing company based in Bismarck, N.D., Med-Trans has 12 helicopter bases around the country. But the only FAA inspectors assigned to monitor the firm were based in Arizona, near one of the company's bases.

"The safety board investigators are interested in the adequacy of FAA oversight of air ambulance companies, especially ones which conduct operations all over the country, but have one FAA office responsible for oversight," says Guzzetti. The NTSB plans to release a study of the industry later this year.

Linda Goodrich, vice president of the Professional Airways Systems Specialists, the union that represents inspectors, says staff reductions and budget cuts have made it increasingly difficult to inspect air ambulance operations.

Limited number of inspectors

The number of employees whom the FAA classifies as inspectors is expected to fall from 3,600 to about 3,400 this year, the FAA says. And hundreds of those workers are assigned to FAA's Washington headquarters or are managers who do no inspections. FAA requests to add inspectors were turned down by the Bush administration. As a result, the agency focuses its resources on its biggest mission: inspecting large airlines.

The air ambulance industry, Goodrich says, "is at the bottom of the food chain."

In fact, the draft report by the FAA task force examining the crashes concluded last December that the agency's efforts to inspect some air ambulance operations were "a hit-or-miss proposition."

The FAA's Ballough says his department is trying to order more inspections of air ambulance firms. But at a time when the FAA's aviation oversight budget has been cut by $25 million, or 5%, the agency can't afford to devote too many inspectors to this relatively small corner of the aviation industry.

"It's an issue of resources," he says.

The FAA task force also concluded that several fixes could improve safety. Its draft report called for mandating improved pilot training for handling poor visibility, tightening air ambulance rules to make them more consistent with those for small airlines, and making weather limitations more strict. All of the recommendations could be put in place quickly, without the lengthy process of writing new regulations, the report says.

But the FAA and the industry have stuck to voluntary enhancements, avoiding mandates that change rules and require better equipment.

Ballough says some rule changes will come, but he says the FAA must proceed cautiously to ensure it chooses the right solutions. The industry also wants to move slowly. In a letter to FAA officials in January, the industry trade group said that imposing costly new safety rules might put some operators out of business.

The industry, says safety consultant Albert, "is accepting a higher accident ratio than the other areas of the aviation industry. And I say it very bluntly: If they weren't accepting it, they'd be doing something about it, be it the FAA, the industry, the pilots or whatever."

Richard Healing, an NTSB member, says air ambulance operators need to be especially vigilant about safety because accident victims and hospital patients usually have no choice whether to fly.

"My goal is to see that the helicopter community gets the same level of safety everybody else gets," Healing says. "It's clear that has not been the case in the past."

For Keith Leonard and others who lost loved ones in accidents, the damage cannot be undone.

"To this day, every time I hear a helicopter I tense up," Leonard says. "Just the sound of it takes me back to that night."

Does anybody have a copy of the Woodhaven Lakes Public Safety radio codes they use? The must be one of the worlds best kept secret. I have a lot at Woodhaven and can not get one of their people to get me a copy. If anybody does have it, I swear I will not tell anybody where I got it from. One of my favorite frequencies to listen to is 453.700. I believe it is IDOT Emergency Trucks that drive up and down the highways? It sounds like they have very interesting work. Bill

169. West Nile Virus information

VIRUS - DISEASE - SPREAD

West Nile virus, a mosquito-borne disease never before reported in the Western hemisphere, has caused encephalitis in people throughout the United States. It is thought to have been introduced into the New York City area in 1999 and by the fall of 2001 had spread as far west as Missouri and Iowa. Mosquitoes become infected when they feed on infected birds, which may circulate the virus in their blood for a few days.

A mosquito peircing human skin.

Infected mosquitoes can then transmit West Nile virus to humans and animals while biting to take blood. The virus is located in the mosquito's salivary glands. During blood feeding, the virus may be injected into the animal or human, where it may multiply, possibly causing illness.

United States Geological Survey (USGS) scientists and other investigators have diagnosed West Nile virus in 18 native bird species from New York, New Jersey, Connecticut and Maryland. Investigators have yet to determine how many birds have died from this disease. Some areas reported very high bird mortality, especially in American crows, but a number of the birds died from other causes. About 49% of the 392 birds tested by USGS and the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), have tested positive for West Nile virus.

Crows appear to be highly sensitive to the virus and provide an early warning system for detecting WNV activity in a community. Knowledge of infected birds in a neighborhood or community allows public health officials to alert citizens about the increased risk of mosquito-borne diseases.

If a dead crow or blue jay is found and appears to have died from natural causes, you should report this information to your local health department. Your local health department will let you know if it is still collecting and testing dead birds. If the local health department has stopped collecting birds, you will be provided with instructions on how to safely dispose of the bird.

SYMPTOMS

Most people who become infected with West Nile virus will have either no symptoms or only mild ones, which may include fever, headache, and body aches, occasionally with a skin rash on the trunk of the body and swollen lymph glands. However, on rare occasions, West Nile virus infection can result in a severe and sometimes fatal illness known as West Nile encephalitis (an inflammation of the brain). The incubation period for encephalitis is usually 3 to 14 days. The risk of severe disease is higher for persons 50 years of age and older. Less than 1% of persons infected with West Nile virus will develop severe illness.

Transmission cycle

Illnesses related to mosquito bites are rare. However, you should see a doctor immediately if you develop symptoms such as high fever, confusion, muscle weakness or severe headaches. Patients with mild symptoms are likely to recover completely and do not require any specific medication or laboratory testing.

There is no evidence to suggest that West Nile virus can be spread from person to person or from animal to person.

PREVENTION

The best way to prevent West Nile encephalitis or any other mosquito-borne illness is to reduce the number of mosquitoes around your home and neighborhood and to take personal precautions to avoid mosquito bites. The following are tips to help reduce the risk:

a.. Apply insect repellent sparingly to exposed skin. The more DEET a repellent contains the longer time it can protect you from mosquito bites. A higher percentage of DEET in a repellent does not mean that your protection is better—just that it will last longer. DEET concentrations higher than 50% do not increase the length of protection. Choose a repellent that provides protection for the amount of time that you will be outdoors.

a.. Spray clothing with repellents containing permethrin or DEET since mosquitoes may bite through thin clothing. Do not apply repellents containing permethrin directly to exposed skin. If you spray your clothing, there is no need to spray repellent containing DEET on the skin under your clothing.

States that have reported positive results for West Nile virus a.. Consider staying indoors at dawn, dusk, and in the early evening, which are peak mosquito biting times.

a.. When possible, wear long-sleeved shirts and long pants whenever you are outdoors.

a.. Place mosquito netting over infant carriers when you are outdoors with infants.

a.. Install or repair window and door screens so that mosquitoes cannot get indoors.

a.. To avoid helping mosquitoes breed in your environment, drain standing water. Routinely empty water from flower pots, pet bowls, clogged rain gutters, swimming pool covers, discarded tires, buckets, barrels, cans, and other items that collect water in which mosquitoes can lay eggs.

170. Police Codes

FEMA pushing out law enforcement radio codes

(Washington, DC-NBC) Aug. 22, 2005 - In Washington, DC, if a police officer says 10-50, he or she is talking about a car accident. Over the border in Montgomery County, Maryland that same code means an officer needs help.

And that's why the federal government says its time to adopt a common language, plain English.

Radio codes are a second language in public safety circles, but the Federal Emergency Management agency says there's no room for misunderstanding in a national emergency.

So it's ordering police and other departments to phase out their code-speak and start talking in plain English by next September, or risk losing millions of dollars in emergency preparedness money.

Gil Jamieson is director of what's known as the National Incident Management System, or NIMS. He says there's been some resistance from police, "Clearly, ten codes are something which are part and parcel to law enforcement."

But he says the ability to communicate is more important, "The notion of moving to plain English is to say what we mean so there is that common understanding."

Chief Terrance Gainer of the US Capitol Police says, "To use money as a hammer to throw out what we've been using for years and years and has worked well for us, that's not such a good idea without a lot more conversation."

Chief Gainer says the codes have a long history for good reason, "It is a concise language, it's very clear, it takes up very little air space and there are some security issues about it."

Many fire departments went to plain English years ago. Some say changing the language public safety officers speak is easier said than done.

I work for an un-named central dispatch center in Indiana.

Codes have different meanings even at the same center - where the use changes depending on which agency we're dealing with. If a LEO calls 10-7, he's going to eat, however if an ambulance calls 10-7 it means they've arrived at the hospital after transporting a patient.

There are already so many "Standard" 10 code listings but the APCO ones seem to be the most prevelant. The way I see it - my center gets no direct funding through the feds (that I'm aware of) thus there is no way to enforce what 10 codes we use.

RE: the use of plain language, I don't think it works that well in a law enforcement realm. There are so many different ways of asking for the same thing there needs to be a standard way of asking for them (10-27 / 10-29 comes into thought.)

The TA has created two (2) web-based tools to assist Non-EA based 800 MHz licensees in determining their reconfiguration requirements and options during the 800 MHz reconfiguration process.

1) The Call Sign Checker will allow a Non-EA based 800 MHz licensee to enter a call sign for a system (with frequencies between 851 and 869 MHz) and retrieve a synopsis of all the frequencies with base station locations (for example with station class FB2) that may be affected by the 800 MHz reconfiguration. Clicking on the hyperlinks in the column headers will provide a glossary of terms used in the synopsis. Licenses without a base station location are not in the available data.

If you are unsure as to what your call sign is, you may utilize the FCC ULS Database to find your call sign.

2) The Frequency Checker will allow a Non-EA based 800 MHz licensee to enter a transmit frequency and retrieve a synopsis on how that frequency may be affected by the 800 MHz reconfiguration. Clicking on the hyperlinks in the column headers will provide a glossary of terms used in the synopsis. Frequencies must be in the range of 806 to 824 MHz (mobile operations) or in the range of 851 to 869 MHz (base station operations).

Money is so tight at the Indiana State Police that the superintendent is making his headquarters staff hit the road, patrolling state highways and interstates.

Indiana's top law enforcement agency, which does everything from cruising hundreds of miles of interstates to busting methamphetamine labs, is down 200 troopers from the authorized strength of 1,334. By the end of this year, the number of vacancies could climb to 300.

There may be few, if any, officers to replace them. If they can afford to have a recruiting class this fall, the number of trainees will be cut in half, to about 30. Even if the department can afford to train new officers, it can't afford to give them weapons, uniforms or police cars, according to Superintendent Paul Whitesell.

Whitesell also said the cost of the vacancies hurts public safety.

The agency, like many other branches of state government, is faced with a budget crunch and has been asked to trim even more this year.

Miles traveled by State Police officers are down 14 percent, to less than 34.8 million miles last year from 40.5 million miles in 2001. And hours on traffic patrol are down 18 percent, to 271,324 last year from 332,140 in 2001.

The number of detectives also has fallen, which means if the trooper who responds to a burglary doesn't investigate, it's likely no one will.

To save money on overtime, officers are asked to take time off rather than collect the extra pay -- adding to the short staffing.

Headquarters staff, which includes 284 officers ranging from the staff attorney and lab technicians to detectives and Whitesell himself, also are working the road at least two days a month. The goal, Whitesell said, is not only to save money and put more troopers on the roads but also to remind his headquarters staff what it's like to work in the field.

"We deal with death and injuries," said Whitesell, 54, a former state trooper tapped in December by Gov. Mitch Daniels to lead the department. "You never know how many lives we save because of our presence. And we don't know how many we don't save because we're not there."

According to the State Police's own statistics, the number of deaths in vehicle crashes increased to 940 last year, up from 787 the year before and 781 in 2002 -- the same time the number of troopers was declining.

Making financial matters worse, Daniels has directed all agencies to cut 7 percent of their budgets to help the state's bottom line. The State Police force isn't exempt.

"We're asking the governor to reconsider," Whitesell said. "We can no longer shuffle things around or move people around. We're at crisis level."

Daniels said he'll make sure there's enough money for a new recruiting class. "The one place we will never scrimp is life and death areas like the State Police," Daniels said.

The State Police also have a morale problem, which the superintendent said he confronted by visiting every post, driving a marked police car, responding to officers' e-mails and phone calls, and working alongside them. Troopers, for example, noticed that he worked the raucous night before the Indianapolis 500 -- something superintendents rarely have done.

Usually, no more than three troopers at a time work the roads from the Pendleton post, covering a district that includes three counties, three prisons, Verizon Wireless Music Center and 34 miles of well-traveled I-69.

"We're stretched pretty thin," said 1st Sgt. Tim Kaiser, the post commander.

On a rainy Tuesday last week, Pendleton Post Trooper Dave Poynter, a six-year State Police veteran, spent part of his midday shift driving the 34-mile I-69 stretch, back and forth. Few motorists were speeding, however, so he spent his time checking abandoned vehicles and making sure a stranded motorist was OK.

"I'd rather be working the interstates," Poynter said.

But he's often needed elsewhere. At the end of his Tuesday shift, about 8 p.m., he joined nearly a dozen officers from different agencies to execute a search warrant at a house not far from the post. There, officers found marijuana, drug paraphernalia and guns.

Poynter, like other troopers, also participates in special details such as traffic control at the Indianapolis Air Show.

And still, Pendleton's bench of troopers is deeper than most.

"Some districts are really hurting," said Whitesell, who's having his staff calculate which part of the state needs extra help. In some parts, especially rural areas, the State Police are the chief law enforcers.

Skyrocketing gasoline prices are further taxing the department, which uses 200,000 gallons each month. Whitesell ordered officers last week to cut gas consumption by one-third, which will require more stationary patrols -- staying put on the interstates to watch for traffic violators.

A memo he wrote last Wednesday to commanders warns that the next step is to rescind off-duty use of police vehicles. Whitesell said he will add five motorcycles, which use less gas, to the department's fleet of 20.

To save money, the State Police also have done everything from canceling newspaper subscriptions to salvaging old batteries, alternators and other parts from old squad cars. And Whitesell raised health insurance premiums for troopers by $100 a month.

A more radical but potentially unavoidable cost-cutting move being considered is closing one or more of the 18 State Police posts. On average, it costs $320,000 a year to keep one open, and several are plagued with problems.

The Terre Haute post is small and needs $15,000 in window repairs. Last year, it caught fire because of faulty wiring.

The Connersville post has persistent water leaks from the ceiling and in the basement. The State Police spent $165,000 on repairs, but they are expected to last only three years.

"I'm trying to save them," Whitesell said of the posts.

State Police posts are visible offices of state government that do more than serve as offices for troopers. The Pendleton post, for example, serves as an exchange point for parents in child custody situations.

The dispatchers log dozens of calls a day. Last Tuesday, the day after Hurricane Katrina tore through the South, one woman called the Pendleton post wanting to know road conditions in Mississippi. A stranded motorist couldn't get the lug nuts off his flat tire, so dispatcher Alicia Foster gave him the number for a local wrecker service. When the State Police needed to find the family of a man involved in a car accident, dispatcher Donna Decker placed the calls.

Jason Barclay, special counsel to Daniels, said the state is researching ways to save the posts. One possibility is to combine the law enforcement efforts and offices of the State Police, Department of Natural Resources, the Alcohol and Tobacco Commission and Homeland Security.

"We're looking at why they all need different dispatchers, different spaces," Barclay said. "But they all have the same mission of making the state safer."

Sixty Indiana State Police officers have been deployed to Mississippi to help with law enforcement, and search and rescue efforts.

They left for the Gulf Coast Sunday morning ready to support those in need.

State police asked for 60 troopers and one mechanic to volunteer their services. Officials say 300 volunteers stepped up to the plate.

Trooper Chad Woodburn is one of those officers heading south; his specific destination is still unknown.

"I feel that it's a good thing to do for the citizens of Mississippi. They need a lot of help, we've got the help to give them some," says Woodburn.

Of course many officers say one of the hardest things about volunteering is leaving their family behind.

Woodburn adds, "My daughter didn't want to let me go this [Sunday] morning, but it's something you've gotta do."

Officer Troy Sunnier says its somewhat bittersweet for him as well.

"I think they're proud of me that I'm going down and doing this, but they will miss me," says Sunnier.

Chad Dick of the Indiana State Police says, "My wife was upset this [Sunday] morning when I left."

Trooper Dick adds, "It's difficult to do. But she understands those people need help"

The troopers will be gone for at least two weeks. They have to bring their own supplies, gas, shelter, everything they'll need to survive.

They're prepared to go into a disaster zone.

Sgt. Sherri Frobeter, of the Indiana State Police believes they will have to work in the most diasterous conditions, but know that it is a worthy effort.

Frobeter says, "My expectations are low for the conditions, and I think our work conditions may be difficult."

Going in expecting the worst, hoping for the best and hopefully we can help some people while we're down there.

While most of the officers will be involved in a law enforcement capacity, those with special training will help with underwater search and rescue.

Sgt. Helmer of the underwater search and rescue team of the ISP says, "We expect to recover dead bodies, [but] we're hoping there's a few people who can still be saved."

The team says they'll do whatever it takes to save as many people as possible.

In addition to the 60 volunteers, 27 Indiana conservation officers are also in route to Mississippi to help with law enforcement and rescue efforts.

Indiana State Police Post Closures A Possibility
Sep 7, 2005, 10:00 AM CDT Email to a Friend Printer Friendly Version

(Indianapolis, AP) State officials are considering closing one or more of Indiana's 18 state police posts in an effort to save money. State Police Superintendent Paul Whitesell is asking Governor Daniels to consider exempting the police from his order to all state agencies to cut seven percent of their budgets. On average, it costs $320,000 a year to keep a post open, and several are plagued with problems. An aide to Governor Daniels says the state is researching ways to save the posts. The state police force is down 200 troopers from its authorized strength of over 1300 and it could be down by 300 by the end of the year. Headquarters staff, including Whitesell himself, are working the road two days a month to make up for the trooper shortage.

High gasoline prices are draining the budgets of area police departments and now Indiana State troopers are the latest to change their driving habits.

Indiana State Police have $2 million in their budget for gas this fiscal year, but at the rate they're going now, they'll end up spending $6 million before it's all over. So the superintendent has asked all posts to cut down on their gas usage by one-third.

Troopers in the northern part are asked to visit the post less often and send their paperwork down with others. Their cruisers will be parked more often, running stationary radar.

Officers who use more than 135 gallons a month, but can't justify it, may face disciplinary action.

Homeland Security Secretary Michael Chertoff gives a thumbs up after speaking at the annual conference of the International Association of Chiefs of Police, Tuesday, Sept. 27, 2005, in Miami Beach, Fla.

LON SLEPICKA
Firehouse.Com News

The Department of Homeland Security Secretary Michael Chertoff has announced today that it is no longer necessary for first responders to discontinue using the 10-Code system of verbal communication in order to come into compliance with the National Incident Management System (NIMS).

Speaking at the Annual Conference of the International Association of Chiefs of Police (IACP) in Miami Beach, Chertoff said there was a strong response from the law enforcement community against this proposal. “We had a discussion about it. As a result, I have decided that NIMS compliance will not include the requirement of the abolition of 10-Codes in everyday law enforcement communications”

That announcement was followed by a warm round of applause from the full house of police chiefs at the Jackie Gleason Theater.

Chertoff went on to warn that when there are multi-jurisdictional and multi-agency events that there must exist a common language that addresses the variations that exist in 10-Code communication. “Everybody needs to be up to the challenge.”

Chertoff also announced an initiative to enhance information sharing capabilities. A pilot program will provide real time incident information, real time alerts that DHS officials receive from the Homeland Security Operations Center. In the pilot areas, Chertoff said these alerts will be made available to key state and local emergency managers who need them also, at the same time as DHS officials get them.

“It is another way of connecting to you and giving you visibility to what we are doing and what we are facing as common challenges,” Chertoff said.

NIMS was developed by Homeland Security to provided a consistent nationwide template to enable federal, state, local, and tribal governments and private-sector and non-governmental organizations to work together effectively and efficiently to prepare for, prevent, respond to, and recover from domestic incidents, regardless of cause, size, or complexity, including acts of catastrophic terrorism. Abolishing the 10-Code verbal communication was part of the consistency dictated.

Compliance comes in as a condition for federal preparedness assistance (through grants, contracts, and other activities) beginning in FY 2005. Therefore all departments and agencies must adopt the NIMS and use it in their individual domestic incident management and emergency prevention, preparedness, response, recovery, and mitigation programs and activities.

Chertoff also talked of the actions and results DHS during and after the recent hurricanes Katrina and Rita. “By any measure the test was extraordinary.”

“Some things worked well but there were shortcomings we have to address,” Chertoff said. “We have to learn the lessons of what happened so we can continue to improve.”

In that effort, although no names were mentioned, a new DHS position will come into existence. A single Director of Preparedness will be named, “with full range of capabilities to ensure our that our preparedness efforts have a focused direction to integrate the department planning, training, exercising and funding.”

Although Chertoff did not say how this position would fit in with FEMA’s mission, he did say that FEMA must be strengthen and continue to work well with state and local authorities.

Chertoff also said clearly that because of the hurricanes, the dismal circumstances created by planning failures has caused the department to undertake a review of the emergency operations plans of every major area in the country. “Their plans must be clear detailed and up to date. This includes specifically a hard realistic look at evacuation plans ranging from earthquakes to subway bombings.

By DEANNA MARTIN
Associated Press Writer

EVANSVILLE, Ind. (AP) -- A tornado tore across western Kentucky and southwestern Indiana early Sunday, killing at least 20 people as it cut through a mobile home park and obliterated trailers and houses while residents slept.

The tornado, estimated to have winds of at least 158 mph, hit a horse track near Henderson, Ky., then jumped the Ohio River into Indiana around 2 a.m.

"It was just a real loud roar. It didn't seem like it lasted over 45 seconds to a minute, then it was calm again," said Steve Gaiser, who lives near the Eastbrook Mobile Home Park in Evansville.

At least 16 people were killed in the mobile home park, according to Eric Williams of the Vanderburgh County Sheriff's Department.

Annie Groves, the county's chief deputy coroner, said people were still believed to be trapped in debris. National Guard units were called in to help with search-and-recovery efforts.

"They were in trailer homes, homes that were just torn apart by the storm, so they're just now getting in there trying to find people," Groves said. "It's just terrible."

Four other people were confirmed dead in neighboring Warrick County, east of Evansville, where the Ohio River city of Newburgh was hit. No deaths were immediately reported in Kentucky.

The storm reduced homes to splinters and scattered debris across the countryside. Entire blocks of buildings were nothing but rubble.

Martin reports search and rescue crews have found at least eleven deaths and have brought some 110 injured survivors to the hospital.

Indiana homeland security spokeswoman Pam Bright said about 100 of the 350 or so homes in at the Evansville mobile home park were destroyed and 125 others were damaged.

Larry and Christie Brown rode out the storm inside their mobile home.

"Man, it was more than words can say," Larry Brown said. "We opened the door and there wasn't anything sitting there."

Chad Bennett, assistant fire chief in Newburgh, told CNN that sirens sounded, but most people didn't hear them because it happened in the middle of the night.

The tornado developed in a line of thunderstorms that rolled rapidly eastward across the Ohio Valley. The National Weather Service had posted severe thunderstorm warnings for sections of northern Ohio.

Ryan Presley, a weather service meteorologist in Paducah, Ky., said a single tornado touched down near Smith Mills in western Kentucky and cut a 15- to 20-mile swath through Indiana's Vanderburgh and Warrick counties.

The tornado appears to have been an F3, with winds ranging from 158 mph to 206 mph, and may have been even stronger, Presley said.

Warrick County Sheriff Marvin Heilman said the victims included a woman who was eight months' pregnant, her husband and a young child in the rural town of Degonia Springs. A teenage girl was also killed near Boonville, and her father was critically injured, he said.

Tim Martin, 42, was at his parents' mobile home when the tornado struck. The three were awakened by the wind, which picked up the home and moved it halfway into the neighbor's yard.

He and his parents escaped unharmed, but they heard several neighbors calling for help. A neighboring mobile home was overturned, he said, and another appeared to have been obliterated.

"All I could see was debris," he said. "I thought it was a bad dream."

Patty Ellerbusch, 53, said she and her husband were in bed at their hilltop home in Newburgh when a relative called and warned them of the tornado. They heard a low roar and ran for the basement.

She made it downstairs, but her husband did not. He was blasted with shattered drywall, wood and other debris as the tornado shredded the home's roof.

"He was running down the hallway, and it knocked him down and ripped his glasses off. He said it felt like being in a wind tunnel," she said. The storm stripped the roof off most of the couple's home, destroyed their barn and left surrounding trees shorn of limbs.

Bright said it was the deadliest tornado in Indiana since April 3, 1974, when an outbreak of several tornadoes killed 47 people and destroyed 2,069 homes.

The Ellis Park racetrack, between Evansville and Henderson, Ky., had significant damage to barns, the grandstand and other buildings, said Paul Kuerzi, the track's vice president and general manager.

Kuerzi said some people working at the track suffered minor injuries.

"It appears at this point that three horses have died from injuries suffered in storm. It's too early to know if any other horses were injured," Kuerzi said in a statement on the track Web site. About 150 horses in training were stabled at the track.

Mike Roeder, a spokesman for utility company Vectren, said 25,000 homes were without power, mostly in Warrick County. There also were reports of natural gas leaks.

MT INTERNET EXCELLENCE AWARD

Monitoring Times and Grove Enterprises have had a presence on the web since 1996, even though Grove had to become its own internet provider to do so – there was no internet provider in furthermost western North Carolina in those days! Since then, the internet and email have transformed the way we do business and transformed the radio hobby itself.

Hobbyists have become increasingly sophisticated about making the Web work for them, and some dedicated individuals have created websites that are head and shoulders above the rest – usually for little compensation except for the satisfaction of creating a stellar product. Ten short years after we logged on, the Internet is such an integral part of our hobby that MT has created the Monitoring Times Internet Excellence Award to honor outstanding sites that come with our highest recommendation.

The very first site to receive the MT Internet Excellent Award is http://www.RadioReference.com – the creation of Lindsay Blanton. The RadioReference site grew up with trunking, coming on line to help the hobby figure out this new, puzzling technology. It has grown to become a huge database, including conventional frequency assignments, trunked radio system information, frequencies, and talkgroups, but it's more than that. You'll also find FCC License assignments and maps, 10-Code Lists, agency maps, files, downloads, links, and detailed agency information for most public safety, military, and local government activities, as well as hosting very active forums with over 145,000 posts.

Larry Van Horn, MT's assistant editor and frequency guru, says when it comes to VHF/UHF, RadioReference is the first place he goes when he needs a radio reference.

All the data at RadioReference is free; however, you must register to access the Radio Reference Database and to post to the Radio Reference Forums.

Monitoring Times is proud to name Lindsay C. Blanton III as the recipient of the First Monitoring Times Internet Excellence Award for his RadioReference.com website. Gerritsen Found Guilty of All 6 Federal Counts!!

Today 12-09-05, at approx 10:05 AM, at the Roybal Federal Building in Downtown Los Angeles, the 7 women and 5 men jury returned with a unanimous >verdict on the Gerritsen Federal case after approx 1 1/2 hours of deliberation, and found Jack Gerritsen (Ex-KG6IRO) GUILTY on all 6 Federal counts.

Jack was taken into immediate custody by the U.S. Federal Marshals.

Count 1, U.S. Title 18, Section 1362, Transmit on a Government Freq; GUILTY

Count 2, U.S. Title 47, Sections 333, 501, Malicious interference; GUILTY

Count 3, U.S. Title 47, Sections 333, 501, Malicious interference; GUILTY

GUILTY
Count 5, U.S. Title 47, Sections 301, 501, Transmitting without a License; GUILTY

Count 6, U.S. Title 47, Sections 301, 501, Transmitting without a License; GUILTY

Jack objected to the immediate incarceration, but the Judge said these are FEDERAL Felonies, and he has been found guilty, and will be remanded.

Sentencing will be on March 6, 2006 at 1:30 P.M. at the same court, Roybal Federal Court, 255 E. Temple St, Los Angeles, Room 850.

The reason for the delay in sentencing is for Mr. Gerritsen to be interviewed by the Federal Probation Dept., which is standard practice prior to any sentencing.

MUNCIE -- A rural Muncie woman fought an armed intruder after she came home and found the man in her bedroom. The alleged burglar was later captured by police in Henry County.Delaware County Sheriff George Sheridan said Friday that the 59-year-old woman, who lives in the 6500 block of South Walnut Street, was fortunate to escape injury in the struggle.
Steven J. Burton Jr., 39, 2905 A. Ave., New Castle, was arrested Wednesday afternoon after a short vehicle chase. Authorities said they found the Muncie homeowner's handgun in Burton's vehicle.According to Sheridan, the woman struggled with the intruder in her bedroom, a computer room and a hallway before she managed to push him out of a door. The man then fled in his sport-utility vehicle.The sheriff's department sent a description of the vehicle by radio to other area departments. A volunteer firefighter in Henry County observed the vehicle after hearing the alert on his emergency radio scanner. He contacted Henry County and New Castle police, who made the arrest, authorities saidSheridan suggested that people who discover their house being burglarized should be a "good witness" but not try to interfere."That individual could have turned the firearm against her," the sheriff said.The homeowner might not have known Burton was armed until after she fought with him, Sheridan said.Burton, who had yet to be formally charged Friday, was being held without bond in the Delaware County jail.

202. Safety of medevac choppers on FAA's radar

By Alan Levin, USA TODAY
WASHINGTON — Federal regulators trying to halt a deadly spate of air ambulance crashes across the nation will soon announce greater restrictions on the medevac helicopter industry, according to government and industry documents obtained by USA TODAY.

Personnel from a U.S. Army hospital load an American soldier who suffered a stroke onto a Medevac.
By Jacob Silberberg, AP

The Federal Aviation Administration this fall began a yearlong program of additional inspections of air ambulance companies and expects to impose tighter restrictions on flying in poor visibility or in mountainous terrain, the documents show. The new requirements are spelled out in FAA drafts of rule changes.

Also, the National Transportation Safety Board is finalizing a special report on the industry that will recommend more far-reaching changes. The agency refused to discuss specifics but said the changes will address safety concerns.

"It is the NTSB's job to make sure that the safest service is provided to this important industry's customers," NTSB acting Chairman Mark Rosenker said.

The helicopter industry vowed in September to lower its accident rate by 80% in the next decade. But the helicopters that ferry the sick and critically injured continue to crash at near-record levels, and safety advocates say that regulators and the industry need to do more to reduce the crashes. (Gallery: Blackhawk Rescues in Iraq)

This year, 13 air ambulances have crashed. Six crashes were fatal, killing 11 people, including a patient who was being airlifted to the hospital after a car wreck in Arkansas.

"Some of the real underlying fundamental factors are still there, and they worry me," said Patrick Veillette, a pilot and safety advocate who has studied the accidents.

USA TODAY reported in July that air ambulance crashes and fatalities per year since 2000 had more than doubled compared with the 1990s. The newspaper found that many accidents were caused by pilots who repeatedly flew into prohibited or dangerous conditions. Federal rules exempted helicopters from some of the most basic safety requirements for airlines.

Officials at the Federal Aviation Administration, which regulates the industry, say they are tightening standards. "We're moving forward in a strong, coordinated effort with industry to raise the safety bar," FAA spokesman Greg Martin said.

"The bottom line ... is we have to improve safety," said Tom Judge, safety chief for the Association of Air Medical Services, the industry's trade group.

Government guidelines that recently went into effect encourage air ambulance companies to train their pilots using the same methods credited with reducing accidents at airlines. Other actions expected soon include:

• Starting within a few months, air ambulance flights over mountains at night will have to adhere to stricter weather restrictions unless pilots have been trained to use night-vision goggles.

• Next year, the FAA will require air ambulance companies to start specialized training to teach pilots how to avoid losing control in bad weather and poor visibility — factors in many accidents.

204. Compatible radio systems would cost billions

By Paul Davidson, USA TODAY
As chaos engulfed New Orleans after Hurricane Katrina struck, emergency responders traded urgent information in a way that was hardly a model of 21st-century high technology.

Deputy David Hebert of St. Bernard Parish Sheriff's Office shows off his two-way radio.
H. Darr Beiser, USA TODAY

With floodwaters surging, they scurried on foot to ferry messages among city police, state troopers and the National Guard.

It's not that the agencies' radio systems didn't work. They just didn't work with each other.

The breakdown in New Orleans was the latest proof of a troubling quandary: Many of the USA's 50,000 public-safety agencies still can't talk to each other in a crisis. The problem has plagued emergency responders in every big disaster in recent memory — from the Oklahoma City bombing to 9/11 to Katrina.

The main culprit? Incompatible radio equipment.

"We didn't learn our lesson after the '93 World Trade Center bombing; we didn't learn our lesson after Sept. 11," Sen. Barbara Boxer, D-Calif., said at a Senate Commerce Committee hearing on Katrina. "We don't need anymore failures."

Yet there's no simple fix. Local agencies often lack the money and radio frequencies needed to upgrade equipment. And federal aid is sorely limited. Even with more money and frequencies, other hurdles thwart seamless communication among first responders:

• City, county, state and federal agencies buy radio equipment for their own needs. Turf battles often keep neighboring agencies from buying compatible gear, or even from teaming in an emergency. The federal government can't force all agencies in a state or region to buy the same gear.

• Safety agencies often fail to plan for interagency communication in disasters or to train officers in how to talk to their counterparts.

• Technology standards that would let disparate radio systems talk with each other have been delayed. Experts at least partly blame foot-dragging by radio manufacturers.

The upshot: Free-flowing communication among agencies in the USA won't come till 2023. At least that's the projection of Safecom, a program in the Homeland Security Department that promotes public-safety communication.

"It's going to take years to do it and a lot of money," says Harlin McEwen, who chairs the communications committee of the International Association of Chiefs of Police. "There isn't any magic bullet."

Congress is poised to take its most dramatic steps yet. It's expected to pass legislation that would give emergency responders more radio channels and money for new equipment. Yet emergency officials say the money is inadequate and the frequencies won't come soon enough.

Still, some areas of the country are attacking the problem, at least in a piecemeal way. Some are pursuing state or regional radio systems that counties or towns can join. Other areas have "gateways" that bridge disparate systems in emergencies. On the way: software-based radios that can span different radio networks.

"It's a big problem that's moving toward a solution quicker than we thought was possible a few years ago but slower than we would like," says David Boyd, who oversees radio compatibility at the Homeland Security Department.

The root of the problem is that radios on one frequency band typically can't talk to those on another. And radios made by different manufacturers are incompatible. Decades ago, agencies chose different channels from their neighbors to avoid interference. Manufacturers also built digital radios that had proprietary technology.

In a survey last year by the U.S. Conference of Mayors, 23% of local public-safety agencies said they couldn't communicate across their own police and fire departments. A third said they can't talk to the county sheriff. Most can't talk to state or federal agencies.

Those gaps can thwart teamwork during crises that draw multiple jurisdictions. A prime example: the 1999 Columbine school shootings in Colorado — where 46 agencies converged with mostly incompatible radio systems.

The most notorious breakdown occurred after the Sept. 11 terrorist attack on the World Trade Center. Police in helicopters couldn't warn firefighters of the imminent fall of the North Tower because the two agencies use different radio systems. More than 100 firefighters died when the tower fell.

Precious seconds

After the 1995 bombing in Oklahoma City, couriers had to carry messages by foot among state, county and city agencies that couldn't talk by radio.

Sometimes, responders relay messages through dispatchers, wasting precious seconds in an emergency.

Some cities use gateways that patch together different radio systems at disaster scenes by funneling the audio of one into the other. The devices cost as little as $10,000 — far less than the millions needed to replace a radio system. But gateways can be hard to set up on the fly. And they work only if the responding agencies have their own transmitter towers in the area.

"It's a stopgap," says John Powell of the National Public Safety Telecommunications Council.

The 2001 terrorist attacks spurred a call to fix the problem. Federal funding was boosted so state and local agencies could pay to upgrade walkie-talkie systems. But critics in Congress call the funding inadequate. It'll cost up to $60 billion to replace radio systems nationwide so agencies can talk to each other, Safecom has said.

Since 2003, the Justice Department has awarded $241 million to states and localities for such upgrades. Yet Congress slashed that funding to $10 million for 2006, from $93 million this year.

A separate Homeland Security grant provided about $7.3 billion for first responders. There's no mandate, though, that any of it pay for compatible radio networks. Just about $1.5 billion has gone toward that goal.

Rep. Bart Stupak, D-Mich., a former state trooper, faults the Bush administration for not dedicating more money to improved communication. "There's no leadership from the federal government," Stupak says. "All we get is a lot of talk."

In the administration's defense, Boyd says Homeland Security grants have risen sharply, from just $1 billion in the three years before 9/11. The department, he adds, doesn't want to dictate local spending decisions.

Another hurdle is a shortage of frequencies. Areas such as Los Angeles County would like to buy new radio systems in frequency bands used by neighboring agencies. Yet there are few available channels.

The federal government had been scheduled to reclaim a swath of analog channels for public safety from TV stations at the end of 2006, when the stations were to start broadcasting in digital-only. That shift, though, has been delayed to 2009 in legislation that sets aside $1 billion for new radio gear.

Some states, such as Alabama, Oklahoma and Mississippi, have tried to build radio systems to link state agencies and let local governments hook up, too. But the cost has proved too high.

Costs prove too high

A Mississippi network could cost $150 million to $300 million. "Astronomical," says Willie Huff of the state Transportation Department.

Even states that do build their own radio systems often can't persuade local agencies to tie in. Denver hasn't joined Colorado's Motorola system, which includes most of the state's localities. The city would have to pay up to $80 million for radios and transmitters.

Oakland County, Mich., declined to join Michigan's new $220 million Motorola digital system. Instead, it built its own $43 million M-A/Com network. Among other concerns, county officials said they feared they'd be forced to cede control to state officials in emergencies and share some frequencies with nearby counties.

Other obstacles:

•Training and planning. Experts note that first responders often spend little time preparing for interagency communication. Some agencies fail to teach responders how to use gateways.

In New Orleans, city officials used three channels for emergency services after Katrina struck. But they failed to set aside separate channels to talk to other area agencies, says Dan Hawkins of Search, a non-profit consortium that aids public-safety agencies.

Two years ago, when an inmate fled from sheriff's deputies in Lincoln, Neb., deputies had to call 911. The deputies, local police and state troopers had never set up a common radio channel for communication. The inmate was on the lam two days before being captured.

•Lack of cooperation. Officials often use radio lingo that differs from city to city or state to state, causing confusion in emergencies, says Donald Lund, a consultant on law-enforcement technology.

Example: "10-99" has dozens of different meanings throughout Texas, from a domestic dispute to an officer going off-duty.

In New York City, a rift between police and fire officials prevented the agencies from setting up a joint command post that might have let police warnings reach firefighters. Such command posts are now required in the city. Police and fire still use separate systems. But fire commanders carry an extra radio tuned to the police band so they can talk to police if necessary.

•Incomplete standards. Fifteen years ago, radio manufacturers started developing a common standard, called P25. The idea was to link different radio systems.

A lack of consensus, though, has kept that standard from being finished. And manufacturers have certified some radios as P25-compliant even though they aren't, says Derrick Orr of the National Institute of Standards and Technology.

Big industry players often have little incentive to back standards that would let responders use equipment from smaller vendors, says Powell of the telecom council.

No. 1 supplier Motorola disagreed, saying it's "a leading driver and proponent of the" standard.

Glimmers of hope

In some states, innovations are offering glimmers of hope. About 10 states, including Indiana, Colorado, Michigan, Minnesota and Florida, have built statewide radio systems that city and county agencies may join. Indiana got most local agencies to join by "including everyone in the design," says project head David Smith.

That network paid dividends in 2002, when a tornado roared through south-central Indiana. Thirteen agencies communicated seamlessly. Calm was restored in seven hours. By contrast, when a tornado struck the same area in 1996, incompatible systems prevented responders from talking.

Other areas, including San Diego County, Alabama and Littleton, Colo. — site of the Columbine shootings — have taken a less-costly route. They've installed gateways that link an area's radio systems. A $194,000 Raytheon JPS system in Littleton connects 36 local, state and federal agencies.

M/A-Com's radio networks bought by Denver, Oakland County and New York state have a more elaborate gateway system. It converts disparate radio transmissions into one Internet protocol for up to hundreds of users. But gateways "require somebody to patch in the call" and use up channels, says Mike Morgan, assistant fire chief in Los Angeles County. "I look at it as an interim solution."

A longer-term answer might be software-defined radios. They could tap into various frequency bands and could be ready in three years, says Fred Frantz, a communications consultant.

Powell envisions "a system of systems." Each region would use a common network and tie in to neighboring regions or states with a gateway.

And when might that arrive?

"We'll see good headway in the next decade," he says.

$120 million radio system ailing
Phoenix firefighters are using old method
Josh Kelley
The Arizona Republic
Jan. 25, 2006 12:00 AM
Over the past two years, Phoenix police and several other city departments have begun using a powerful new radio system, costing more than $120 million, that was supposed to enhance communications, particularly in the aftermath of a major disaster or terrorist attack.

The goal for police and firefighters was to create a network that would allow them to talk to one another or to their colleagues from neighboring municipalities from anywhere in the Valley.

But Phoenix firefighters say the system has been plagued with transmission delays and lost signals in large buildings, critical issues that will take at least five years and an estimated $50 million to resolve.

Officials from the Fire Department and Motorola, which built the system, say that firefighters, engineers and the city's technology personnel failed to adequately discuss how the new radios would work before the system was installed.

As a result, the city will ask voters in March for $15 million to begin work on improving the system and to expand and maintain Phoenix's old radio system, which the city's 1,432 firefighters, and their colleagues from the 17 other departments dispatched by Phoenix, continue to use.
Replacing system
Phoenix officials began exploring a replacement for the city's old radio system more than 10 years ago. The city hired consultants in the 1990s to assess its communications needs, and they recommended that Phoenix purchase a new radio system, much like the one later installed by Motorola.

The decision to buy the new radios was further prompted by the Federal Communications Commission, which announced plans to require that frequencies used by VHF radio systems be divided into narrower bands. That requirement, which is scheduled to go into effect in 2013, meant Phoenix's old radio system would have to be replaced or dramatically changed.

To purchase the new radio system from Motorola, Phoenix budgeted $112.5 million, with $91 million coming from a bond election in 2001, said Kris Sigfridson, acting head of the city's Information Technology Department.

Other cities whose firefighters are dispatched by the Phoenix Fire Department, contributed $13.5 million, she said.

The Phoenix department's share of the system was $35 million.

Sigfridson said that $4.3 million set aside for new handheld radios will not be spent now because firefighters are still using the old radios.

How they work

The city's old VHF radio system sends signals from one radio to another, much like a walkie-talkie. It has limited range and only a few channels, but signals are reliable.

The new system, an 800-megahertz digital trunked radio system, sends a signal from one radio to a repeater and then out to other radios. Capacity is much greater, allowing firefighters and police on opposite ends of the city to talk to each other.

Instead of the few channels available with the old system, the new radios have dozens of "talk groups," in which signals are delivered on the first available frequency within a pool of frequencies to reduce overcrowding.

Engineers crafted the new system to provide seamless communication among local, state and federal agencies, an important capability when responding to a major disaster.

Communications problems among police and firefighters hampered rescue efforts during the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks in New York and Hurricane Katrina in New Orleans, drawing calls for reform from congressional leaders and others, including U.S. Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz.

Problems arise

Before the new system was brought online in early 2004, Phoenix firefighters tested the radios inside buildings, where firefighters are in the most danger during a fire. They found that the new system's radio signals were more easily disrupted inside large buildings and had worse audio quality than the old system.

Fire officials decided to stick with the old system, even though many of the city's other departments, including police, converted to the new system.

"We have right now the safest communications system in the country for our fire departments here in the Valley," said Division Chief Nate White, who oversees technical services for the Phoenix Fire Department.

"Should we move forward with this new technology when we don't have all the answers, or should we wait?"

White said Motorola did not adequately test or develop its technology before consultants recommended it.

"The testing that was done was not done in the actual settings," White said. "It was done with machines and through theory."

Phil Dobosz, systems integration vice president for Motorola's Western region, said his company did not fully understand how the Fire Department wanted its radio system to function. But it's not clear where the communications breakdown occurred, he said.

"I think we're all kind of wondering why it wasn't better understood upfront," Dobosz said.

White said the Fire Department and Motorola both failed to adequately discuss potential problems.

A Fire Department report cited similar radio problems in other cities, including New York, San Diego and Columbia, S.C.

In October during a symposium sponsored by the International Association of Fire Fighters, White warned colleagues to avoid making the same mistake of buying new radio systems that put firefighters at risk.

Alan Caldwell, senior adviser for government relations for the International Association of Fire Chiefs, said fire departments have found that new radio systems such as Phoenix's work well with proper engineering, installation and training of those who use them.

"Most jurisdictions find that it works just fine, but it's different," he said.

Mesa, which also dispatches Gilbert and Apache Junction firefighters, finished installing a new Motorola radio system last summer with the idea of creating a regional network with Phoenix.

Mesa Assistant Fire Chief Gary Bradbury said the adjustment to the new system has been minimal.

But unlike Phoenix, Mesa for years has used radios that send signals to a repeater before reaching another radio.

The Phoenix Fire Department is accustomed to direct radio-to-radio contact and must deal with mountains and tall buildings that cause interference, which is not a big factor in Mesa.

Complicating mutual aid

Because Mesa and Phoenix firefighters are using different radios, a patch was added to the radio systems to ensure firefighters dispatched by both cities could communicate when responding to the same incident.

A battalion chief is assigned to monitor the radios when firefighters dispatched by Mesa and Phoenix work together.

And Mesa firefighters use radios from their old system, not their new radios, to respond in cities such as Tempe and Chandler where Phoenix dispatches.

For day-to-day operations, those fixes work, Bradbury said. But if a major disaster was to occur with hundreds of firefighters responding from multiple cities, they would be limited to only a few radio channels provided by the old system, he said.

The channels would likely become overcrowded, Bradbury explained, while the new radio system would have many more talk groups to use.

"We're limited back to what we've been limited to the last 20 years," Bradbury said.

Not so, said Phoenix Deputy Fire Chief John Maldonado, co-director of the city's Homeland Defense Bureau.

He said the patch system used in dispatch centers allows the Valley's firefighters and police to easily communicate with each other and federal officials during a disaster response, regardless of the radio systems they use.

Maldonado added that the response to a disaster would be primarily coordinated off one radio channel. Only support personnel would use other channels or talk groups, not those responding directly to the incident, he said.

Capt. Mike Worrell, who works under White in the Fire Department's technical services division, said the Phoenix Fire Department is also adding radios to each firetruck that will allow command staff to use the city's new radio system to communicate with police and federal agencies.

"We're ready for a disaster, more ready than we've ever been," White said.
Police make adjustments
Phoenix's other departments, including the police, are pleased with the new system. Dispatchers can hear officers more clearly, the radios have a much greater range and they can be encrypted, said Jesse Cooper, communications manager for Phoenix police.

But the department did find a hitch.

Officers detected a delay of a second or less before a voice could be transmitted after pressing the talk button on the new radios, a potentially dangerous problem particularly for officers on tactical teams that depend on instant communication, said Lt. Stan Hoover, who oversees the Police Department's Special Assignments Unit.

Police worked with Motorola to provide officers with a channel to which they can switch for direct radio-to-radio communication without noticeable delays, but dispatchers can't listen to the conversation or speak to officers.

Sigfridson said the Fire Department does not want to use radio-to-radio communication unless its dispatchers can hear what's going on inside a burning building, where firefighters work in low visibility and easily become disoriented.

In Phoenix, repairs and new equipment are needed to maintain and expand the VHF radio system, so fire officials requested $15 million in bond money.

The City Council approved the request in November, and it will go to voters for approval during a bond election in March.

At least $5 million will be used to develop a strategy for correcting the new radio system, Sigfridson said.

In 2011, the Fire Department plans to request an estimated $46 million in bond money to pay for equipment, such as more repeaters, to adjust the new radio system, White said.

The goal is to have radios that use repeaters and direct radio-to-radio channels that can be monitored by dispatchers and automatically triggered when firefighters respond to a fire so they avoid switching channels inside burning buildings, White said.

Motorola is working with the department to adjust the system, Motorola's Dobosz said.

Sigfridson said she is hopeful a solution will be reached, "but, of course, firefighters are the ones that are the toughest to sell because they're the ones with their lives on the line."

Hammond Indiana has the Same Problems and it has cost 3 Million so far, I was Friends with the Police Chief when they started switching over 4 Yrs Ago and I Suggested they hang on the old 154.86 VHF system as a back up, They did not and Whiting In. got the old Equipment and they love it, Claiming it is the best thing ever happened it WORKS

I know some of Might go to Michigan Fishing , Races , Etc.

Both houses of the Michigan legislature today (2/21) agreed on the final Language and passed a sweeping revision to the state's law prohibiting Scanners in vehicles without a permit from the State Police. It now Goes to the Governor for his signature. If signed it will take effect 90 days thereafter.

It eliminates the need for a permit (which reportedly costs the state $40k a year and one employee's full time work), and prohibits possession Of a scanner by a person convicted of a felony within the previous five Years (unless they're a ham licensee) or possession of a scanner during
The commission of any crime, other than minor offenses which carry a Punishment of less than 93 days imprisonment, which would be most Traffic offenses.

No more need for a MSP permit or amateur radio license. Assuming it is signed by the Gov , so I wouldn't toss your Permits out Just yet.

This will revise Michigan's section 508 (MCL 750.508), previously 1931
PA 328, and one of if not the country's oldest laws against having a "Police" receiver in a vehicle, CL 1929, § 578 from August of 1929.

217. Bush signs 700 MHz transition package into law

As expected, President George W. Bush yesterday signed budget-reconciliation legislation that includes a firm date for TV broadcasters to clear 700 MHz spectrum and $1.2 billion in funding earmarked for public-safety communications.

Last week, the U.S. House of Representatives voted 216-214 to approve the budget package, which requires broadcasters to clear the 700 MHz airwaves on Feb. 17, 2009, after which 24 MHz of frequencies will be allocated nationwide to public safety. Other airwaves in the band will be auctioned to commercial operators in a bidding process expected to generate $10 billion in additional revenue for the government.

Under previous law, broadcasters tentatively were targeted to clear the 700 MHz band by the end of this year, but they were not required to do so until 85% of all U.S. television sets could receive digital signals—a threshold that could take decades to reach, according to many analysts.

Some public-safety officials previously had expressed hope that first responders might receive more than the 24 MHz of airwave earmarked, but enacting the budget measure effectively ends such discussion, said Harlin McEwen, chairman of the International Association of Chiefs of Police communications and technology committee.

“All the spectrum that is not going to public safety is ready to be auctioned, so it is highly unlikely [that more frequencies would be dedicated to public safety],” McEwen said.

In addition to allocating spectrum to public safety, the law creates a $1 billion grant program to pay for public-safety interoperable communications systems, $156 million for national alert and tsunami warning systems and $43.5 million to help fund E-911 upgrades as called for in the Enhance 911 Act passed in 2004.

Most of the $10 billion in expected auction proceeds will be used to reduce budget deficits and to fund a program designed to provide people with analog TV sets low-cost converters that will let them receive digital broadcasts.

Here's a changed attitude ...
FORT WORTH, TEXAS, June 7, 2006:
BNSF Railway Company (BNSF) is recruiting rail fans to help keep BNSF properties safe by reporting suspicious activities and to help prevent possible security breaches.

William Heileman, BNSF general director, Police and Protection Solutions says, "Every day across the country, rail fans photograph and watch trains as they pass through communities. It seems natural to harness their interest to help keep America's rail system safe."

Rail fans can register for the program by going to the Citizens United for Rail Security (CRS) Web site (http://newdomino.bnsf.com/website/crs.nsf/request?open). CRS participants will receive an official identification card along with access to news and information on the BNSF CRS Web site.
To report suspicious activity, CRS members and the public can call (800) 832-5452. The information will be taken by a BNSF representative and routed for appropriate response.

The CRS program is an outgrowth of another BNSF grassroots program, called BNSF ON GUARD, which encourages employees to report suspicious activities, trespassers or individuals to BNSF's Resource Operations Call Center (ROCC). The BNSF ON GUARD program, which started in 2003, has been successful, with more than 200 employees reporting suspicious activities since its inception. Employees have reported theft, vandalism, arson, attempted suicide, and other criminal violations, threats to safety, or unusual events on or near railway properties.
"Security is everyone's business. Because of heightened security status, Americans are being asked to be the `eyes and ears' for law enforcement," says John Clark, BNSF assistant vice president, Resource Protection Solutions Team.

242. Public schools to get hazard warning radios

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID
Published Monday, September 25, 2006

WASHINGTON - When the squeal from an automad warning radio brought news a severe storm was approaching, school principal William Tomic acted quickly.
He alerted teachers to bring children indoors and to a secure interior hallway for shelter.

Minutes later, 70 mph winds ripped the roof off the kindergarten wing of the Charles F. Johnson Elementary School in Endicott, N.Y.

No one was hurt, thanks to the warning and the timely response to it.

“It really did work very well, we were so pleased with it,” Tomic said in a telephone interview. “The parents were as well.”

Many were concerned when they arrived to find the roof lying on the side of the building. But their children were safe and had not even seen the damage occur, Tomic said.

Hoping for more such success stories, the government planned to announce today that it will supply hazard warning radios to all 97,000 public schools in the United States.

The National Weather Service, part of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, operates more than 950 short-range radio stations. It has encouraged schools, business and homeowners to buy warning radios that are activated with a broadcast signal that automatically turns a radio on and announces a potential hazard.

The Homeland Security Department now has decided to provide $5 million to make sure these radios are in every public school, NOAA Administrator Conrad Lautenbacher said.

Originally conceived as a means to deliver weather warnings, the system now covers all hazards - for example, terrorism, abducted children and derailed trains carrying toxic materials.

Of course, it takes more than just having the warning radio. School authorities have to know what to do when an alarm sounds.

Tomic said his school has two weather drills a year. Each classroom has a kit that the teachers bring along to the shelter area to keep the children occupied with games, stories, songs and other activities.

In Fairfax County, Va., three tornado and severe weather drills are held annually, said Fred Ellis, the director of safety and security for public schools.

“Certainly we’ve had our share of severe weather,” Ellis said, noting the radios have been in county schools for several years.

Typically they are in the school office where there is always someone to monitor them. “They make quite a racket,” Ellis said, and it is useful for administrators to keep track of what is happening outside their buildings.

“We’re not immune from severe weather and we take that very seriously,” Ellis said.

In announcing the plan to distribute the radios, NOAA pointed out that more than 10,000 major thunderstorms, 2,500 floods and 1,000 tornadoes hit the United States annually, and that hurricanes threaten the Gulf and East coasts.

Lautenbacher said weather experts from local Weather Service offices will be available to assist school officials in determining how best to use the radios.

The radios operate 24-hours-a-day, receiving forecasts and warnings from the Weather Service’s 123 forecast offices as well as other information.

Six states - Washington, Tennessee, North Carolina, Maryland, Florida and Mississippi - already mandate use of the radios in schools. NOAA said those schools will also be included in the new program to make sure they have the most recent models. Also included will be tribal schools and public schools in U.S. territories.

Typically the radios are smaller than a clock radio, have a battery backup in case of power loss and are sold at electronic and other stores for $20 to $80. Most can be programmed to respond only to warnings for a specific area - a county or city, for example.

'Hams' keep connections even in disasters

By PAUL POVSE

Published Thursday, October 12, 2006

There were times during the aftermath of the attacks on the World Trade Center when New York City emergency departments, their cell phone systems overloaded and repeaters destroyed, could not communicate with one another.
A similar communications crisis reared its head in New Orleans after Hurricane Katrina. Same with the tsunami of December 2004.

To the rescue, amateur radio and its public-minded devotees.

"There are any number of times when other communication doesn't work," said Dick Drew, president of the Capital Area Amateur Radio Emergency Response Team. "During Hurricane Katrina, the league brought in hundreds of 'hams.' It was virtually the only communication for a period of time."

That sense of public spirit motivates amateur radio operators to hold field-day drills, one of which will begin at 9 a.m. Saturday at Riverside Park.

Amateur radio enthusiasts will bring their rigs, hook them up to car and boat batteries and batteries supplied by Staab Battery Co. And they'll test them to see if they can get like-minded citizens from one end of the state to the other talking - and hearing- each other clearly.

Because someday there is apt to be a statewide emergency, a tornado, the New Madrid fault cracking, or, of course, outside agitation.

"We call it (the challenge) 'interoperability,'" Drew said. "A lot of different organizations - fire, police, ambulances, from different towns - come together (in an emergency). People use all of their own frequencies, and the problem is that they can't talk to each other. We can tie all of that stuff together."

Another of the radio operators, John Swartz, said, "We want to try to get as great a coverage across the state of Illinois as possible."

A preliminary test in July - radio operators communicating from Lake and Henry counties to Peoria to Carbondale - was successful.

"Now," says Swartz, "we want to see if they can hear each other. If Public Health here needed to talk to Public Health elsewhere, say to find out what was going on in Woodford County, and had no other way to do it, we could do it."

Amateur radio is valuable because, recent history says, when a disaster occurs, people en masse turn to cell phones. Until they jam.

"In the event of a disaster, the typical cell phone system is going to get overloaded and go down," Swartz said. "This is an added dimension for emergencies."

For Swartz and Drew, amateur radio has had a lifelong pull.

"I've been licensed since I was 11 years old, and I am over 60 now," said Drew, owner of Capitol Business Systems. "I enjoy being able to talk to people all over the world. It's so nice to be talking to somebody in the South Pacific islands, Antarctica, people all over the world. It is fascinating to learn about different places."

Drew calls amateur radio "a hobby you can play with for a while, and as you change places in your life, you can leave it. But it's always there to come back to."

Swartz's interest harkens to boyhood in the Hyde Park neighborhood of Chicago, when his father brought home a telegraph key his friend had used in World War II.

"I've been in the hobby for 45 years. I was always interested in electronics and talking to people overseas, making friends that way and not having to spend hundreds of thousands of dollars to travel.

"It (radio's appeal) has been the overseas contacts and always the Morse Code," says Swartz, an attorney with Giffin, Winning, Cohen & Bodewes. "It's like a completely different language. I've always thought of it being more private. You talk with your fingers.

"The events of Sept. 11 made a lot of ham radio operators much more keenly aware of the need to be prepared, to maintain a state of readiness ... to have a set of gear ready, with their clothes and supplies. To be self-sufficient and able to go out into the field and operate in a matter of hours."

And for Drew, the opportunity to test the links in the communications chain - for that day when clear talking and listening becomes vital - comes on Saturday.

"The longer we go without something happening," he said, "the harder it is to maintain interest."

RadioReference.com Newsletter - 10/12/2006 RadioReference.com News and Updates for October 12th, 2006

Dear RadioReference.com Member,

Fall is here, and cooler temperatures are on the way! The Radio Communications Industry and RadioReference.com have been busy over the summer with innovation, so please take a moment to review what has been happening over the past few months.

Industry News

a.. Radio Shack releases a firmware upgrade for the PRO-96 and PRO-2096 Digital Trunktracking Scanners. This firmware upgrade provides improved decoding of digital audio on large Project 25 systems, as well as improved decoding of digital audio for systems in areas with weak signals or areas with multipath or simulcast signal problems. Many users are reporting better performance of their PRO-96 or PRO-2096 scanner after applying the update, and Radio Shack encourages you to apply this upgrade if you own either of these scanners. More information on the DSP upgrade can be found on the Pro-96 Wiki Page.
a.. Icom announces the new Icom IC-R9500, which will be the premier radio communications receiver in the Icom portfolio, replacing the IC-R9000 which was a dream radio for many communications enthusiasts. The radio will support P25 digital decoding as well as a whole host of features that professional radio receivers provide. See the IC-R9500 Wiki Page for the latest information on this new radio. Many expect that the price for this radio will be close to $10,000 US Dollars, so start saving your money!

a.. Uniden announces a Remote Head for their latest portable and mobile radios. This remote head, called the BC-RH96, will support the BCD996T, the BCT15, the BCD396T, and the BR330T, and is expected to be available on February 2007. Below is a mock up image of what the remote head will look like:

Recent News and Updates Regarding RadioReference.com

The MyRR Module, which provides personalized services for Premium Subscribing Users was updated with the following:

a.. New Links to Forum Threads and Private Messages
b.. Ability to watch an unlimited amount of counties and trunked systems c.. Quick links to FCC Grants and FCC Licenses for counties that are being watched Mike Agner has been leading our efforts on the RadioReference.com Wiki. Here are some recent updates to this great reference source for the RadioReference.com community:
a.. A new article that outlines dealers for everything from mobile mounts to batteries, speakers and much more has been added. Check out the new Scanner Accessories article b.. Links for the PRO-96 DSP Upgrade and PRO-2096 DSP Upgrade has been added to their respective pages on the Wiki.
c.. For the Milcom'ers amongst us, the Patuxent River Complex article has been updated; frequencies in italics still need verification.

d.. A new article for Fort Belvoir/Davison AAF has been added, courtesy of CitationJet e.. In addition, the Military Web Pages and Mailing lists article has had some minor maintenance; each webpage is now categorized by state, where possible; this should make it a bit easier for folks looking for something specific f.. Satellite chasers, this one's for you - we've added a SATCOM page, which for the moment, is a mix of milsat and amateur links. But if it's expanded enough, perhaps two pages can be made out of this...(hint,hint)
g.. Another new article for Icom has been added; this one on the new R2500 h.. Minor changes applied to the RR FAQ page. Unfortuantly, Ben Saladino, the author of the popular Radio Manager software, has decided to leave the software field, citing the wide availability of the UASD for the new DMA radios, and lack of time to update his software. We have since purged the Wiki of his software links, and are saddened to see him go.
i.. Some cleanup and organization has been added to the Live Scanners article.
To see the latest information on updates to the wiki, see Mike's thread in the radioreference.com forums.
What future enhancements are coming to RadioReference.com? Here is a list of what the we are working on:

a.. Geo-encoding of communications data for GPS Location Based scanning supported by the new Uniden BCD996T.
b.. Updates to the RadioReference.com Web service to support FCC data, searches of the RadioReference.com Database, and Geo-encoded Data.
c.. Additional CSV Downloads, including FCC license information and trunked system talkgroups.
RadioReference.com Premium Subscriptions

Starting July 1st, 2006, RadioReference.com started providing premium services to members through a subscription model. Note that general access to the RadioReference.com Database, the Forums, and the Wiki, will always remain free. This policy will never, ever change.

User Submissions and the Administrators
Hats off to the database administration team for their outstanding effort in processing submissions, and most importantly, many thanks to all the contributors of detailed frequency information to the site. The administration staff currently consists of 60 individuals all over the world who are recognized experts in their local areas, and volunteer their time to manage the number of submissions that are received from the visitors. They are the lifeblood of the site, and work extremely hard to keep the data in the database up-to-date and consistent.

Some of the things that we are looking for to get the database in even better shape are the following:

a.. Military airfield frequencies and assignments
b.. Local Attraction information, such as water parks, amusement parks, and stadiums.
If you have any information that you can contribute to the site, please use the submission engine to submit your local frequency and trunked system information directly to the the database administrators. Don't sit on it, share it with your fellow hobbyists! Also take a moment to view the submission guidelines document put together by the administration staff describing some rules of thumb for submitting information to RadioReference.com.

Hi all,

Does anyone know if anything like this is available in Delaware county, and what are the requirements to receive a radio?

Just information. Monroe County (Indiana) has begun handing out 800 mhz APCO25 complaint radios for use with Project Hoosier SafeT. No one can give me a definate time frame for when they will begin use (some are already using the tac channels, etc) except for "when everyone gets their radios."

A handheld police scanner may have saved the life of a 50-year-old Town of Sheboygan Falls man during a drive-by shooting on Sunday, Capt. Dave Adams of the Sheboygan County Sheriff's Department said today.

Floyd G. Kimme, of W5147 Willow Road, was seated in a recliner in his living room about 8:10 p.m. when a bullet was fired into his home by a large-caliber weapon, Adams said.

The bullet went through the wall and struck the scanner, which was directly between the wall and Kimme, deflecting the bullet away from him, Adams said.

Adams said the sheriff's department does not have any suspects.

The world's first radio broadcast took place a hundred years ago on Christmas Eve 1906.

The broadcast, a program of live music, readings and phonograph recordings, was transmitted to ships in the Atlantic Ocean by Reginald Fessenden ☐ a prolific inventor largely forgotten by history.

In the early 1900s, people communicated by radio using Morse code. Fessenden, a Canadian rival of Marconi, decided to broadcast a voice message. His invention of AM radio was years ahead of its time.

On 24 December 1906, radio operators at sea were startled to hear a voice coming over their receivers. Before the word broadcast had even been invented, they heard a mix of speech with live and recorded music ☐ including a rendition of 'silent night'. However, Fessenden's innovation failed to take off commercially and it wasn't until the 1920s that the massive potential of radio for entertainment was realised.

Fessenden originally planned to broadcast across the Atlantic to Scotland. With considerable effort, masts and equipment were built at the small hamlet of Brant Rock near Plymouth, Massachusetts and at Machrihanish on the west coast of Scotland. When, at the last minute, a storm destroyed the Scottish installation, he decided to broadcast to ships at sea instea

266. COPS CAN SPOT THIEVES' DIRTY PLATES

COPS CAN SPOT THIEVES' DIRTY PLATES

By TOM LIDDY and PATRICK WHITE

January 16, 2007 -- Car thieves, beware - you can run but you can't hide from the NYPD's latest technology.

Two cops on patrol in Brooklyn caught a pair of teens asleep at the wheel yesterday when their new high-tech license plate reader revealed that the car had been stolen in a carjacking.

Kyle Harper and Wayne Goodson-Gabriel, both 19, were sitting in a 2004 Toyota Camry on Lincoln Road between Bedford and Rogers avenues in the Prospect Lefferts Gardens section just before 3 a.m. when the officers drove by.

What might have been a routine cruise down the block turned into a bust when the new plate reader alerted the cops that the car had been stolen.

The Camry had been taken at gunpoint a week earlier from a 63-year-old Marine Park woman.

The victim, a librarian, had pulled into the garage behind her Fillmore Avenue home just after 6:30 p.m. on Jan. 7.

When she opened the door, she encountered the gunman.

"The guy started screaming, 'Stop looking at me! Stop looking at me!" and demanded cash.

When she told him she didn't have any, he ordered her out of the car and drove away.

"I couldn't believe he didn't kill me," the shaken victim told The Post. "It's amazing. I don't know how they found him."

The victim, who asked that her name not be printed, was dumbstruck when she was told that the plate scanner was responsible for recovering her car.

"It sounds like a remarkable piece of technology," she said.

The system uses two cameras on top of a patrol car that are linked to an onboard computer with a license-plate database. It can scan up to four lanes of traffic, including vehicles doing 120 mph.

Images of the plates are captured - up to 10,000 per police shift - processed by the computer using character-recognition technology, and then compared to the nationwide database.

If a plate is recognized as being stolen or flagged for its involvement in a crime, cops in the patrol car are alerted instantly.

In yesterday's collar, Harper and Goodson-Gabriel were busted without incident. A third man who was in the car fled on foot.

Harper and Goodson-Gabriel both face charges of grand larceny and criminal possession of stolen property.

It's unclear if either was involved in the carjacking.

The NYPD acquired the first of its 25 plate-recognition systems last September and plans to buy 75 more, a spokesman said.

Each reader costs about $21,000.

The devices, which are distributed citywide and can be switched to different cars, have helped the NYPD recover 293 stolen vehicles and make 162 arrests.

The clerk told police that she was robbed at gunpoint. She described the suspect as a slender white male with blondish hair who was over six feet tall, wearing a hooded T-shirt, baggy jeans and a blue bandanna. A passerby, who heard the incident on a police scanner, told police that he spotted a man matching the suspect's description get into a black Chevrolet Blazer near the truck

Faker alerts National Weather Service to bogus weather reports

Associated Press
Published June 11, 2007, 12:40 AM CDT
MILWAUKEE -- Someone has been submitting fictional reports of severe weather to the National Weather Service, causing unnecessary alerts and frightening people.

The areas affected have included Milwaukee, La Crosse, Chicago, and Lincoln, Ill., said Tom Schwein, chief of the National Weather Service's systems and facilities division for the central region in Kansas City, Mo.

The person started sending reports in mid-April through an online form on the service's Web site.

"We've been detecting a regular pattern of a person who has been submitting false severe weather reports that are constructed in a way that seem very realistic," Schwein said. "Whoever this person is seems to have knowledge of severe weather reports."

Schwein said reporting severe weather is like calling in a bogus bomb threat or unnecessarily pulling a fire alarm.

"People had to take cover, media interrupted their broadcasting for hours -- we've alerted people unnecessarily and frightened them. This person has really misled us," Schwein said.

More than 25 pretend reports were submitted from the same computer over one weekend this month, and the service typically gets 40 to 50 a month from that source, Schwein said. It does not appear that any phony reports were sent during Thursday's severe weather, according to Pat Slattery of the Weather Service.

The public can use a form on weather service local Web sites to anonymously report weather. The agency recently added a notice at the top of the form that submitting false statements is a federal crime, with a maximum penalty of up to five years in prison and a $250,000 fine.

Schwein said investigators have traced the Internet protocol address of the faker's computer. The FBI is helping subpoena records to figure out who is registered for the computer IP address, he said.

On April 25, a report came in stating that a tornado causing damage and injuries had hit Blue Mound, Ill. Local NBC affiliate WAND-TV in Decatur, Ill., interrupted normal broadcasting for approximately three hours, said Lee Davis, chief meteorologist with WAND-TV.

"We were getting warnings from the National Weather Service which seemed inconsistent with the data I was showing on my radar," Davis said.

Severe weather was already present in that county. The county's Emergency Management Agency issued a tornado warning based on spotter reports, said Phil Anello, the emergency agency's coordinator for the county. Nevertheless, the reports of damage and injuries were false.

The person usually submits the false reports when severe weather is already present, Schwein said.

"The time and location of the report will line up very well with our satellite and radar data," Schwein said. "They'll report damage that fits the structure of the storm."

Forecasters consider radar, environment and spotter reports before alerting the public of severe weather, said Rusty Kapela, warning coordination meteorologist with the weather service's Sullivan office.

"We need two out of three in most cases to push the meteorologist past the point where they'll issue a warning," Kapela said.

The false reports coming through the public Web site differ from reports from trained spotters who register with the weather service and must log in to sites with a password.

Happy Scanning

Don KA9QJG

Some Including the News media from what I have read and seen including NASA Stated They had No Idea Why the Video was being picked up on the Baby monitor, Well most of us on this group are Familiar With Cable TV Leakage, All You need to Know is the Brand and Freq of the Baby Sitter Monitor , well I checked it is A Summer Infant Black and White Monitor system. What Cable Co provider is used in Palatine Comcast WOW Etc ,. Then a Freq Chart of that and Match up what freq and Channel NASA is on and I think We will find out that it is coming from Cable leakage,

Also 900 Mhz or 2.4 Ghz. Both frequency ranges have wireless systems that allow one to broadcast their VCR/Satellite/Cable box from one room to another room.

But of course The cable Co dos Not want that info out Especially with all the old Cable Systems and Private Contractors doing the work cheaper, They get a Complaint of bad Reception Do they replace the line, No they add a Preamp and put a stronger signal into the House Customer is Happy but what about Leakage like this that gets into Pd, FD And all kinds of Scanner Freqs
We are use to ,

I know I have a 440 repeater and the input is on a Cable Home Shopping channel, The interference kept kerchunking the Repeater , I the early hours of the Morning I had to get up and Shut it down, yes I had a Pl , I had Comcast and WOW Techs out both was blaming each other I Used a UHF Beam and found the leaking Amp,

They both told me that they are required by the FCC to maintain a closed system and they were the Secondary user. And ask Me not to call the FCC, They had a crew out here and fixed it right away ,I understand that was rare, I did get a chance to View the Equipment in the Cable Vans Each one has a Receiver that is tuned to a VHF Aircraft Freq . Called a Pilot tone If they find that signal coming in breaking the Squelch they GPS It and have a Tech come out and Fix.

Sorry for the long post but I thought Some might of wanted to know what this So called Mystery Might be

I recall some post on the group about Someone using a 2.4 ghz Monitor receiver and riding around Seeing and hearing all kinds of Stuff same Principle Except RF in the Air not Cable.

Baby monitor picks up video from NASA
Thu Jun 14, 4:52 PM ET

An elementary school science teacher in this Chicago suburb doesn't have to turn on the news for an update on NASA's space mission. She just turns on her video baby monitor.

Since Sunday, one of the two channels on Natalie Meilinger's baby monitor has been picking up black-and-white video from inside the space shuttle Atlantis. The other still lets her keep an eye on her baby.

"Whoever has a baby monitor knows what you'll usually see," Meilinger said. "No one would ever expect this."

Live video of the mission is available on NASA's Web site, so it's possible the monitor is picking up a signal from somewhere.

"It's not coming straight from the shuttle," NASA spokeswoman Brandi Dean said. "People here think this is very interesting and you don't hear of it often ? if at all."

Meilinger silenced disbelieving co-workers by bringing in a video of the monitor to show her class on Tuesday, her students' last day of school. At home, 3-month-old Jack and 2-year-old Rachel don't quite understand what their parents are watching.

"I've been addicted to it and keep waiting to see what's next," Meilinger said.

Summer Infant, the monitor's manufacturer, is investigating what could be causing the transmission, communications director Cindy Barlow said. She said she's never heard of anything similar happening.

"Not even close," she said. "Gotta love technology."

292. Whatever Happened To The Electronics Hobbyist

Electronics used to be one of the greatest hobbies ever. There were literally hundreds of thousands, maybe even millions, of people who used to play around with electronics as an avocation or part-time interest and activity. There were at least a dozen magazines supporting this group and plenty of parts and kits suppliers to keep them happy. Kids learned electricity and electronics in school. As a result, when they ended up getting the bug, they ended up not only adopting electronics as a hobby, but also made it into a career. You don't see too mach of that going on anymore. So what the devil happened to the electronic hobbyist?

I started playing around with old radios in junior high and got interested in ham radio. I built the classic crystal radio and was able to hear a couple of local AM stations. My next-door neighbor and I strung a two wire cable we found in a vacant lot between our two houses and used our ear phones to make a simple telephone...by accident. What a thrill. Then my dad gave me his old Hallicrafters S-38 shortwave radio. That really did it. I was hooked. A local police officer gave code and basic electronics lessons to my neighbor and I after school, and we eventually got our novice ham licenses. We built tube transmitters to go with our receivers and had a ball on CW. I eventually went on and learned electronics in college, got a degree, and became first a technician, then an engineer. And the rest, as they say, is history.

I suspect that my background is similar to many of yours. But that path from hobbyist to engineer is disappearing□if it hasn't already dissolved entirely. The hobby aspect of electronics seems to have gone away and thereby virtually eliminated one of the best sources of new engineers and techs. But why has this happened?

What Is a Hobbyist?

First, let me clarify what an electronic hobbyist is. I define an electronic hobbyist as someone who enjoys learning more about electronics by building, and in some cases designing, electronic devices. In the days of tubes and discrete transistors and components you could easily build a radio receiver, transmitter, or some other gadget for a few dollars. If you couldn't design it yourself, you could go to one of the many monthly magazines like Popular Electronics, Radio-Electronics, Elementary Electronics, Electronics World, QST, and Nuts & Volts and find a project of interest. And for those who didn't want to venture out too far on their own, there were the kit manufacturers. The king of kits was Heathkit, of course, but there were a bunch of others way back when like Eico and Allied (Knight kits) and a whole slew of smaller ones.

Typical hobbyist projects ranged from a few simple parts to really elaborate complete pieces of equipment like a power supply, audio amplifier, communications receiver, or photo timer. When ICs came along in the 1970s, experimenting really took off. You could build even more elaborate devices with better performance, thanks to op amps and digital ICs. Experimenters went wild. At least 108 projects were based on the 555 IC timer. Later in the 1970s, the microprocessor came along and the personal computer kit came on the market. That set off a whole new wave of experimenting and started a whole new industry. Another batch of magazines like Byte, Interface Age, Kilobaud, Creative Computing and a few others offered lots of projects to build and ushered in a whole new dimension...software and programming.. Many electronic hobbyists became computer hobbyists□what we called hackers back then.

There were all sorts of electronic hobbyists. Hams probably dominated the category as they were a serious bunch simply because you had to get an FCC license to play in that arena. They built their own transmitters, receivers, antennas, keyers, test equipment, and lots of other accessories. There were also audio hobbyists who dabbled in hi-fi and stereo equipment, speakers, etc. Radio-controlled airplanes and boats were also popular. And one unique category of electronics hobbyists was that bunch who could fix not only their own TV sets, but their neighbor's as well. Take the tubes down to the drug store, test them, buy new ones, and away you go. And I suppose you could put CBers into this category...the breaker, breaker 10-4 good buddy crowd.

In short, electronic hobbyists built things either from scratch, from plans, or a kit. They made accessories, gadgets, toys, and all sorts of other entertaining things. It was a satisfying process to see what you made actually work or solve some useful problem. And you learned a little more each time you did it.

So What Happened to the Hobbyist?

The hobbyist has not disappeared entirely. But the ranks have thinned considerably. I suspect that today there are probably less than a quarter of the hobbyists there used to be. My best guess is that the hobby era peaked sometime in the 1980s. Most of the magazines died out by the early 1990s□the same time most of the kit companies started to fade away. The demise of those businesses directly affected the number of current and future hobbyists and engineers.

The number one reason why the electronic hobbyist has declined in number is...the integrated circuit. If you are not buying this, consider the following. In the beginning, ICs made electronic hobbying fun and productive. You could build ever larger and more complex things without extensive knowledge. But ICs, on their way to fulfilling Moore's law over the years, got smaller in size (but with larger transistor counts). Digital speeds increased from a few MHz to over hundreds of MHz and today many GHz. Analog circuits also got higher performance and operated at higher frequencies. Packages got smaller and the ICs with pins for through-hole PC boards (PCBs) have evaporated. Surface mount ICs are the norm today, as are surface mount discretes that are about the size of a piece of rice.

Have you ever tried to breadboard a circuit or build a project with surface mount parts? Fun isn't it? You need tweezers, a magnifying glass, and a tiny heat-controlled soldering iron. And with pin spacings of a mm or less, it is easy to short out a few pins or miss a pin entirely. And how do you solder a ball grid array IC? Yes, there are ways to breadboard with these parts. Neal Greenberg of SchmartBOARD sent me a few samples of their breadboard products that really facilitate the soldering of surface mount parts for experimentation. (www.schmartboard.com.) This size and build problem was foremost in killing home built projects. Even today, the few electronic experimenters still around routinely use many of the parts from yesteryear with pins that can be soldered or plugged into breadboarding sockets. Why are there so many 555 timers, 741 op amps, and 7400 TTL projects even today when in real modern electronic products these parts have disappeared long ago?

Another problem is that as ICs got larger in scale (not size), it became more complex to make a product. Instead of simple projects you could build whole systems. That left many of the novices in the dust, as there were few real engineering types willing build the big systems.

Another factor was the emergence of massive cheap off-shore manufacturing. This meant you could buy ready-built products cheaper than you could buy the parts and build one yourself. A good example is a power supply. Even a complex switch mode supply for a PC cost less than $30 bucks. Why bother with building your own? Lots of products turned out like this, especially computer-related boards and modules. No wonder the kit companies went away.

One other problem is test equipment. At one time you could test what you built with a volt-ohmmeter and maybe a cheap 5 MHz single channel scope. Signal generators, power/SWR meters and counters were pretty inexpensive and you could even build your own. But today, you need a scope with a bandwidth of up to 1 GHz, a logic analyzer, and maybe even an AWG. With typical prices over $10k each, what hobbyist could afford them?

But the large scale ICs had another affect. It allowed manufacturers to create whole new families of exciting and useful products like cell phones, MP3 players, DVDs, and laptop computers. How do you get a 10-year-old kid excited about receiving an AM radio station on a crystal radio if he already has his own cell phone, MP3 player, and TV set? Boooorring... Although if you can get a 10-year-old to build a crystal set, I have found that the "Eureka effect" of having made something yourself that actually works, simple as it is, still yields a positive, confidence-building end result.

Where Are We Today?

Yes there are still some of the electronic hobbyists I described active today. Their nature has changed considerably, but they still like to build small projects with older parts. And there are a few kit companies still out there to serve them (Ramsey, Elenco, Kelvin, Jameco, and a few others). There seems to be three distinct concentrations of hobbyist: amateur radio hams, those who like robots, and the new breed of hobbyist that builds projects with embedded controllers. The hams are a big category. There are about 650,000 hams in the U.S. and about 3 million worldwide according to Allen Pitts of the American Radio Relay League (ARRL), the national association for ham radio. Of those 650,000, I suspect that over half are what we generally refer to as "appliance operators." These are the hams who buy all their commercial gear and really don't get into building equipment. The remainder are indeed true hobbyists, as they do build, design, experiment, and get involved at a greater depth with the equipment. The ARRLs publications (QST and QEX) are probably the best electronic hobbyist magazines available. (www.arrl.org)

The robot crowd has been around for a few years. It all started back in the 1980s with a robot interest group spinning off from the computer hobbyists. Then the Heathkit Hero robot came along and created a stir that has grown year after year. The Battle Bots competitions on TV also turned many on to this hobby of building and playing around with robots. There are lots of kits available, many of which are used as teaching platforms in some colleges. The Lego robot platform is a super product that is a toy and a serious learning tool. The robot guys even have their own magazine, Servo.

The embedded controller bunch is a growing category that attracted some of the older hardware crowd, but also a new batch of hobbyists who are more akin to programmers than electronic engineers. Since every electronic product has an embedded controller today, it makes sense for hobbyists to pursue such projects. There are tons of cheap development boards, kits, and other stuff to make things interesting. The premier magazine serving this group is Circuit Cellar. Nuts & Volts magazine, about the only surviving generic electronic experimenter magazine, also covers embedded controller projects.

The "Systems" Hobbyist

There is also what appears to be another kind of electronic hobbyist emerging. This is what I refer to as a systems hobbyist. Systems hobbyists buy and experiment with every electronic gadget. They might be fascinated with FRS (family radio service) two-way radios for example. They have surround sound audio systems and were probably the first in their neighborhood to get the big screen HDTV, TiVo, satellite TV dish, and all the other related stuff. Or they do shortwave listening or experiment with the new HD, XM, or Sirius satellite radios to their car. These people also do geocaching with their GPS receivers and install 400-W stereo systems in their trucks.

Others hook up their MP3 players to their stereo systems. Some install their own home security systems. PC gamers are in this category with their hyped up super computer-level PCs with graphics that will blow you away. Anyway, they are the non-ham equivalent to an appliance operator. They work strictly at the system level, but still need a general understanding about what goes on inside these devices. They connect stuff together and make it work. They hang around at Best Buy and Circuit City rather than Radio Shack. It is fun stuff. Yikes, what I just described is all the rest of us. The consumer electronics person. Consumers are more enamored of their electronic devices than ever before. The whole consumer electronics space has grown horrendously over the years. And we all own more electronic products than ever. I guess that does make us all electronic hobbyists of a sort.

Am I an experimenter? I actually am. I have a bench with test equipment, breadboards, and mostly older used stuff (100 MHz analog scope, etc.) and some power supplies and odds and ends of ham test equipment like a counter, signal generator, power/SWR meter, etc. And I have several PIC and 68HC11 embedded controller development kits I use for the programming, mostly still in assembler (I hate C.) I have been playing around with some of the many ISM wireless modules lately. Really cool how cheap and easy it is to make almost anything wireless. And like in ham radio, the experimenting possibilities with antennas are limitless. I just put up a G5RV antenna, but ended up needing an automatic antenna tuner to get it to work. Endless fun.

Electronics has evolved and so, as a result, has the hobbyist. So perhaps the whole electronic hobby thing didn't really go away, it just changed. It is different now because the way we design, build, and make electronic equipment just does not make it practical to work at the component level. We don't fix much of our electronic equipment anyway. We just throw it away and get new and better ones. Aren't we all just looking for our cell phone to fail or get lost so we can get a cool new smart phone?

Hello I hope Everyone is Doing well , I know this Time Change is Important to some of our users Here is some of the changes and a Commentary

The latest chapter in Indiana's saga over time begs the question: Will it ever end?

The latest chapter in Indiana's saga over time begs the question: Will it ever end?

The federal government seemingly hopes it does.

The U.S. Department of Transportation recently ruled that five more counties that were allowed to switch from the Eastern Time Zone to the Central Zone in 2006 could now switch back.

The agency included this sentence in its news release:

"In its decision, the Department will not consider petitions for time zone changes in Indiana for at least one year in order to minimize disruptions and allow DOT and the communities to assess the impact of the changes."

One might interpret that as bureaucratic speak for: "Enough is enough! We're tired of dealing with your time feuds."

The clash over clocks in Indiana has dragged on for so long, it's almost part of Hoosier culture.

Some say the most recent twist is a sign it's winding down. Others believe it will keep on keeping on.

One thing's for sure. The latest chapters have been bizarre.

They began when the General Assembly, after an intense lobbying push by Republican Gov. Mitch Daniels, passed the 2005 law that mandated all of Indiana observe daylight saving time. The law required Daniels to petition the U.S. DOT to consider time zone changes in Indiana, and the agency responded by saying it was up to each county to ask to switch.

Seventeen counties, most in southwestern and northwestern Indiana near pockets of those already on Central time, responded by asking to be moved from the Eastern Zone to Central. The federal agency, which says it bases its decisions on "convenience of commerce," allowed eight to switch.

After the change, seven of those eight ultimately asked to be switched back: Pulaski County in northwestern Indiana, and Daviess, Dubois, Knox, Martin, Pike and Perry counties in southwestern Indiana.

Daviess, Dubois, Knox, Martin and Pike counties filed a joint petition. Officials said that after time changed, a groundswell of support pushed to go back. Among other things, they said there were inconveniences for some commuters and businesses and a realization that it was better to be on the same time as Indianapolis and Louisville, Ky.

Daniels wrote the Transportation Department supporting the new request, along with that of Pulaski County. Perry County later filed a separate petition seeking to go back to Eastern if the other five in the southwest were allowed to.

The feds are allowing Pulaski County and five of six southwestern counties to go back on Eastern time. But it rejected Perry County's request, saying it was more oriented to Central time.

Got all that?

Daniels issued a news release essentially applauding the latest federal decision.

"We now have the highest number of Hoosiers ever on the same time yearround," he said.

But some county commissioners and lawmakers say that the daylight-time law Daniels pushed so hard for sparked new confusion and fiercely divided the clock debate.

"It shouldn't have been bothered with to start with," said Martin County Commissioner Mike Dant. "That's where the governor dropped the ball."

Boise Fire Says No to 700

Digital Radios

Posted on December 18th, 2007

Radio <http://blog.tcomeng.com/index.php/category/policefire-radio/>

Ada County Idaho was one of the first jurisdictions in the United States to embark on a cutting edge 700 MHz digital trunked radio project. The City of Boise is in Ada County and agreed to participate in the countywide radio system. The Boise Fire Department purchased more than one million dollars of 700 MHz digital mobile and portable radio equipment with the expectation that the new equipment would provide the best possible communication for its first responders. Unfortunately, the Fire Department staff has determined that the digital radios would present a risk to firefighter safety if placed into service. The radios have not been deployed because of this issue.

Specifically, Boise firefighters have determined that voice transmissions over the digital radio system are usually unintelligible when a feature on a Scott SCBA is alarming, or when multiple PASS alarms are sounding in the same area. The software used in the digital radios that converts voice to digital data cannot isolate the spoken voice from the noise. Voice transmissions are unintelligible when the radios are used in a high-noise environment.

Boise Fire staff conducted extensive tests and determined that the problem is endemic to the digital modulation used in the new radios. The problem is not directly related to the 700 MHz frequency band or to trunking, however the FCC requires that digital modulation be used in 700 MHz radio systems.
The only reasonable conclusion is that 700 MHz digital radio equipment is not suitable for use on the fireground.

In 2006, some fire departments discovered that the voice audio from digital radios in the presence of background noise (common to firefighting operations) will cause distortion to the degree of unintelligibility. The International Association of Fire Chiefs (IAFC) have established a working group to study this issue. The IAFC issued an alert to its membership on March 20, 2007. There is no known workaround or solution to this problem as of this writing.

Boise Fire Department and the other fire departments in Ada County will remain on analog VHF radio systems.

The City of Boise Idaho has a population of about 201,000 residents, however the metropolitan area has about 635,000 persons. The City covers approximately 64 square miles.

The reason We are seeing a lot of Departments Upgrading their Communications System since 911 , Is With our Tax Dollars and Grants from Homeland Security , and I am all for it has always Been a Problem of Different departments not having or wanting to communicate with other But Just because someone gets a lot of Money to throw around at least get something that Works and is not worse what they originally had to begin with

Happy Holidays

PS Hammond in where I live Upgraded using 3 Million to Mot Syst 2 Trunking I was friends With the Assistant Chief and Advised Him to Keep the Old System Especially for a Back up they did Not , but Sold it to a Local PD Who use it and Works fine 154.860 , The New 800 Mhz Trunking dos Not work well at all .

New Police Radio System in New York State Draws Scrutiny

A $2 billion emergency radio network intended to connect all emergency agencies and local police and fire departments in New York State <http://topics.nytimes.com/top/news/national/usstatesterritoriesandpossessions/newyork/index.html?inline=nyt-geo> has failed its first major test, prompting concerns from some state officials and causing the state's second largest city, Buffalo, to opt out of the system.
The contract to build a network of wireless transmission towers that would allow tens of thousands of police officers, firefighters and other emergency personnel statewide to communicate was awarded in 2005 to M/A-Com, a division of Tyco International. The system was supposed to be in operation in Buffalo and surrounding Erie County and neighboring Chatauqua County by last June.
After the network's rollout in Buffalo, however, the city's top fire official said its problems were so severe that the radios did not work in roughly half the city.
"West of the center of the city we had zero reception," Fire Commissioner Michael Lombardo said last week. In the areas that did receive transmissions, he said, "it sounded like a guy was talking in a tin can."
He says Buffalo now intends to upgrade its own radio system, which will then be able to connect with the statewide system.
Under the current state emergency radio system, large areas of the state are unreachable, and many police and fire departments cannot talk to each other. After receiving complaints from federal and state lawmakers, the State Office of Homeland Security is considering hiring an independent company to conduct its own tests on the M/A-Com network.

"We are strongly considering the advantages to hiring an outside company with technical expertise," said Michael A. L. Balboni, the deputy secretary for public safety, who is Gov. Eliot Spitzer <http://topics.nytimes.com/top/reference/timestopics/people/s/eliot_l_spitzer/index.html?inline=nyt-per> 's top homeland security aide. "If those glitches are still present when the system is presented to the state for acceptance and then payment, that will be a very large concern."

He added that if the problems persisted, they could derail the project.

Officials from M/A-Com expressed confidence the issues could be addressed, and said problems in Buffalo had been caused by interference from other radio transmissions. The system has been tested in neighboring Chatauqua County, which is mainly rural, and officials there had no complaints, said Victoria Dillon, an M/A-Com spokeswoman.

The gaps were "localized in a few sites, like cell carriers, a TV station in Canada," Ms. Dillon said.

Michael R. Mittleman, the state official overseeing the project for the Office of Technology, agreed.

"We believe that when we get back to the testing out there in February that the problem will be resolved," he said.

Mr. Mittleman said that he hoped the system would be operating in the two counties by April, and that the state would decide at that point whether to accept the network. That makes the tests in Erie and Chatauqua counties especially critical.

An upgrade for the state's antiquated emergency radio network had been in the planning stage since the 1990s, but the project took on new urgency after the Sept. 11 attacks. The project, known as the Statewide Wireless Network, will be designed so that even cities that do not directly participate in the project, like New York City, will be able to connect with the system.

The contract drew criticism when it was awarded by the Pataki administration, with some lawmakers questioning whether M/A-Com had the track record to handle the job.

The company hired former Senator Alfonse D'Amato <http://topics.nytimes.com/top/reference/timestopics/people/d/alfonse_m_damato/index.html?inline=nyt-per> , a close ally of former Gov. George E. Pataki <http://topics.nytimes.com/top/reference/timestopics/people/p/george_e_pataki/index.html?inline=nyt-per> , as its lobbyist, and telecommunications companies lobbied aggressively for the contract.

The project has encountered challenges. Recently, the senior state police official assigned to oversee the construction of the network said in an e-mail message obtained by The New York Times that the state's Office of Technology had not been demanding enough of M/A-Com, and called the Erie County effort a "debacle."

The official, Thomas J. Cowpers, a staff inspector, left the project after friction with M/A-Com and the Office for Technology officials.

Mr. Cowpers wrote in the e-mail message that his role had been curtailed "due to my incessant criticism of M/A-Com management and my constant frustration with O.F.T.'s unwillingness to hold them accountable. ''

Mr. Cowpers declined to comment, and Lt. Glenn Miner, a state police spokesman, said the state police would not comment on the e-mail message. "From everything I am told, we remain very positive about it," Lieutenant Miner said.

Officials in Erie County, however, said the problems were serious. Michael R. Summers, president of the union representing sheriff's deputies in Erie County, said he thought the system might have been pushed into service too soon. He said the radios worked in some areas but received no reception in others.

"There were spots where we could not communicate with each other," he said. "We would move 10 feet up the road, and it would work."

According to a report from the state comptroller's office last December, the state was scheduled to have the new radio system running in Erie and Chautauqua counties by last June.

Ms. Dillon said the company now expected the system to be operating in the two counties by the end of the first quarter of 2008. After that, the state will have 45 days to accept or reject M/A-Com's work. If the state rejects the system, Ms. Dillon said, it will not have to pay anything.

The entire network is scheduled to be finished in 2010.

When M/A-Com won the contract, critics raised questions about the company's handling of a wireless contract for Pennsylvania. That system, expected to be finished in 2001, was more than three years late and cost more than double the original projection. But in a statement last week, New York officials said the delays in the Pennsylvania contract were caused by problems unrelated to M/A-Com.

The total cost of New York's system were slow to emerge. When it was first proposed, state lawmakers were told it would cost more than $1 billion, but far lower than the $3 billion bid by M/A-Com's competitor, Motorola. By the time the contract was signed in 2005, the final cost was $2.1 billion.

As everyone knows a Lot of Scanners now has the Close Call feature. What I would like to know if any of them will allow You to select a group of Freqs to Receive hits on so it will not be slowed down for detecting the whole spectrum , Example for this would be if You were searching for freqs that You know should be active , If I was looking for Rail Freqs I would not be at O'Hara airport or the Race Track or visa versa . But I would just like to Close call known freq allocations, I am aware that I could do this with some of the Expensive Optoelectronics Equipment.

Also since I am taking up Bandwidth like to Wish Everyone a Safe and healthy New Year

317. Scanners Unlimited Is Closing

Yahoo group: ScanIndiana
Date: 2008-01-28 01:46:38 UTC
From: Don
Topic: 317 Message: 317

I Was just informed of this and thought I would share the Info

Don KA9QJG

To All of My Dear Customers:

After 31 years in the radio business, it is with sadness, and yet a feeling of peace, that I am announcing my retirement. My reasons for this decision are the following:

1. My goals have all been reached:

To stay in business at least 30 years, to retire once I can begin to collect Social Security, and to close my store when my business was doing well, and at a time of my own choosing, rather than being forced to close because business was bad.

2. It felt like it was time.

3. I want to become active in doing a variety of volunteer work in my community, and having the business does not afford me ample free time to do that.

It has been very fulfilling to have dealt with so many wonderful people, and I love the relationships I have had with many of my customers. That is what I will miss the most, as I am a people person, who has enjoyed all of the interactions, both with customers in the store, as well as those on the phone.

One of my fantasies for the future, is to travel around the U.S. with my wife and meet for coffee, many of the customers whom I have gotten to know on the phone, but have never met in person.

Beginning Tuesday, January 29th, I will be having a Going Out Of Business Sale, with almost everything in stock being discounted, many at or below my cost.

On my web page, http://www.scannersunlimited.com/ , there is a list of the items I currently have in stock, with both their regular in store prices, and their liquidation sale prices. Items are in limited quantities, and will be sold on a first come, first served basis. All sales are final, and there are no returns or exchanges, but most come with the full factory warranty, unless marked as used or demos.

The sale will go until Tuesday, March 11th. During the last week of the sale, I will be selling my display models, but not until then.

During the sale, I will not be able to handle special orders, if I am out of stock on any item, with a few exceptions.

For the first several days of the sale, I may not be able to answer the phone for long periods, but promise to reply to any messages left on my answering machine, within 24 hours. Shipping of phone or e-mailed orders will be done no later than the next business day after the order is placed.

The best way to place an order is to e-mail me at scannerunl@... with your name, phone number, best time to reach you, and what you would like to order. I will then get back to you by phone that same day if you are available and can be reached. Because it is likely to be quite busy in the store, especially early on, if I do answer the phone, I may not be able to chat or answer questions about my retirement, and hope that everyone understands why this is necessary.

I am sorry to be leaving a scanner community that I have enjoyed serving for 31 years, and hope that the other dealers can meet that community's needs.

As you may know Scanners Unlimited in CA closed down. I went out to San Franciso a couple of weeks ago and bought Glenn Cohen's entire vintage scanner collection (about 100 pre-1985 scanners). Then, at this year's show, we heard that someone was having an estate sale of vintage scanners. I couldn't resist and bought another 100 radios, all different from Glenn's. All in pristine condition. (There are many dupes in this bunch though.) Lots of weird stuff like Robyn and Craig, etc. Combined with my collection I'll have over 200 unique scanners/receivers. My goal is to open a museum at my offices. I'm looking for the following models. If anyone has some other unusual models they want to e-mail me about that's fine too. I may have more later I'm looking for but here's what I'm most interested in right now:

* Fujitsu-Ten scanner
* Bearcat-E (8-track scanner -- I really want this)
* Bearcat Comp-u-scanner (the one that ran on that early PC -- I have the box/manual but no scanner black box)
* Radio Shack PRO-2001
* Bearcat 800 (there should be a lot of these floating around)
* JIL SX-400
* Standard AX-700
* Montgomery Ward Scanner
* Sony ICF-SC1
* Red RCA scanner by GRE
* RELM HS200

I'm looking for display boxes too as the artwork will be part of the museum to show how the radios were marketed.

NBC's "Dateline" to explore the perilous world of tower dogs on July 21

July 16, 2008 - NBC's "Dateline Presents" says it will take "a never-before-seen journey into the hazardous world of the tower climbers who work on the frontlines of America's high-tech communications system." The program, "Tower Dogs," will air on Monday, July 21 at 10:00 PM/ET.

The hour-long broadcast is expected to give an up close and personal no-holds-barred look at tower dogs' lives - up in the air and on the ground. "We experience their on-the-job tension and watch them work hard, play hard, and mourn when they lose one of their own," NBC said in a press release. In a twist on all the dangerous-job programs that solely feature males, typically narrated with muscular prose, "Tower Dogs" follows an unusual tower crew boss: a woman named Nikki Collins, a single mom, former cheerleader, and the person keeping her tough-guy charges in one piece. Although there has been a noted increase in tower construction company owners and climbers that are women they are in a small minority in a predominately male profession.

The "Dateline" team worked for four months documenting this group of tower climbers as they worked their way through 40 towns and cities in 24 states. During this time there were seven fatalities nationwide, including five deaths in a 12-day period in April. National exposure long overdue, say many.

Gene Hughes, originator of the much beloved Police Call radio directories has died.

Here is his obituary as published in the LA Times:

COSTIN, Gene Born in Louisville, KY November 25, 1927. Gene Costin moved with his parents at the age of 12 to Los Angeles and loved this community. He lived a full and accomplished life. As a young man Gene devolped interests in politics and astronomy and closely followed developments in both areas throughout his life. He was a passionate civil libertarian and supporter of many liberal causes and other charities. He was well known in the two-way radio communications business and renowned to radio hobbyists nationwide for Police Call, which he published under the name Gene C. Hughes. After retirement he served long hours as a volunteer at the LAPD, for which he received a Volunteer of the Year award from the State of California. He was loved and will be missed by a wonderful family- his devoted wife Mitzi, three children, and their spouses-Cathy Costin (Mitchell Reback), Robert Costin (Yves Yarborox), and John Costin (Rachel Phipps). He was proud of his four grandchildren, Isaac Reback, Mia Reback, Silas Phipps-Costin, and Judah Phipps-Costin, and he adored his dog Murray. In lieu of flowers, contributions may be made to Tower Cancer Research Foundation or a charity of your choice. Services will be private at Gene's request.

I found this Very Informative and thought I would share especially some New Radio Terms that will help us when monitoring with our Scanners.

The U.S. Department of Homeland Security (DHS) released the National Emergency Communications Plan (NECP) to address gaps and determine solutions so that emergency response personnel at all levels of government and across all disciplines can communicate as needed, on demand, and as authorized.

August 24, 2008
Tom Kneitel, who loved radios from the time he was a kid, turned his hobby into a career, writing magazine articles and books for other radio buffs. Known by his CB handle "Tomcat," Kneitel was a storied figure in the world of CBs, short-waves and scanners.

His 1992 book Tune in on Telephone Calls -- which told readers how to use inexpensive equipment to join the "popular pastime" of listening in on other people's cell-phone calls -- earned him interviews by The New York Times and The Boston Globe.

Kneitel, 75, died Friday. The DeLand man had been ill for more than a year, with a variety of health problems, said Judy Kneitel, his wife of 54 years.

He began writing about radio in the 1950s. "My goodness, I'm having fun and they're paying me," he told his wife.

His last job had been as editor of Popular Communications magazine, but he had also written for CB Horizons magazine, S9 magazine, Popular Electronics and TV Guide. He also wrote a number of other books.

Born in New York City, Kneitel spent part of his childhood in Florida. He was the grandson of Max Fleischer, the cartoonist who had a Miami animation studio that created Betty Boop and Popeye cartoons.

His family moved back to New York when he was a teenager, and Kneitel spent most of his life there. In 2004, the Kneitels retired to DeLand.

He was a funny man but also a workaholic who would "be at the typewriter 18 hours a day," Judy Kneitel said. "He never missed a deadline. He enjoyed writing."

Even as he was entering a hospice last year, "he turned out three more articles," she said.

Most of his columns contained humor, plays on words and strong opinions. A Pennsylvania newsletter for radio buffs last year reprinted this retort by Kneitel, who'd been taken to task for his criticism of an old organization: "I don't care when it was founded, I just want to know when it will be losted."

Kneitel got his first radio from relatives after he contracted polio when he was 14 -- and was hooked.

Though he recovered from the disease, he always walked with a limp, his wife said, and about 15 years ago "post-polio syndrome" landed him in a wheelchair. He'd been suffering from heart disease and diabetes, among other problems, too.

In addition to his wife, Kneitel is survived by seven of his eight children and by 10 grandchildren. The family plans a private memorial service.

There has been a rash of messages back and forth on various Yahoo Groups of a new "service" called Grouply. Grouply allows you to supposedly manage your subscriptions to various mail lists from Yahoo and others but it also requires that your Yahoo name and password be stored and provided to Grouply, thus they have full access to all your Yahoo services. Other people who have subscribed to Grouply have reported a large increase in spam, virus and malware being transmitted due to it.

While the owners of Grouply assure that there will be no problems and they promise to behave there is no protection against a Grouply employee or hacker accessing the information. It also allows Grouply to send invites and other spam to members of your lists, whether you want it or not.

For these reasons Grouply is not allowed on Here . Do Not join Grouply under any ID's that are subscribed to this group. While this is a well protected list we can not protect it against the actions of Grouply, http://www.ncs-tech.org/?p=1146 has much info on this "service"

I Don"t think any of us want a bunch of Spam

If you fall in the qualifications, head to

Is it A Federal offense to monitor a Cell Phone Yes it is.
I had a Friend loan me a new fancy GPS Unit with the Bluetooth that Sets up Your cell phone to be Hands Free,
A lot of States Now requires that while driving , the unit had a FM transmitter that would put the call over your Auto speakers

Well I was trying out the New nice Hands free system Sounded great coming over My speakers , A guy pulled up beside Me and at the Red light , He shouted Nice phone conversation He just heard and He drove away .

I started thinking about this and found of course a Scanner would probably not pick up the Bluetooth but anyone would be able to tune you in on their Auto radio if close because the FM Transmitter that was sending the Signal to the auto FM Radio.

So keep this in Mind while talking on your cell phone using a device like this.
Was, it illegal for him to monitor my call on his auto FM Radio absolutely not.

Have you ever wondered what television signals are being broadcast in your area? Perhaps you've recently purchased a new HDTV and you're looking for some High Definition content. Or maybe you're just looking for some additional sources to compliment your existing cable and/or satellite services. Well, here's a tool that can analyze your location to help determine what FREE broadcasts might be available in your neighborhood.
This tool can help answer questions like
- Which broadcasters are transmitting locally?
- How far are the transmitters from me?
- Which direction should I point my antenna?
- How strong are the signals in my area?
- What analog and digital channels are available?
- (NEW) How will things look after the analog shutoff in Feb-2009

Don KA9QJG

December 29, 2008
WASHINGTON -- U.S. consumers who wait too long to request government coupons to subsidize converter boxes for the digital television transition in February may come up empty-handed, a regulator has warned.
Due to a last-minute rush of coupon requests, demand may exceed supply in the coming month, said the Department of Commerce official overseeing the subsidy program.
Rep. Ed Markey, a Massachusetts Democrat who asked for the update on the digital TV transition, said Congress may need to quickly pass additional funds in early January for the coupons.
Congress ordered the switch to digital signals, effective February 17, 2009, to free up public airwaves for other uses such as for police and fire departments.
The switch will mean improved picture and sound for TV viewers, but about 15 percent of the population rely on analog-only over-the-air signals and therefore need a converter box to keep their screens from going black.
The government program doling out $40 coupons to subsidize the converter boxes is likely to reach the $1.34-billion limit of its budgetary authority in the first week of January, said Meredith Attwell Baker, acting assistant secretary for Communications and Information at the National Telecommunications and Information Administration.
"Once the obligation ceiling is reached, the program will hold coupon requests until funds from unredeemed coupons become available," said Baker in the December 24 letter to Markey who chairs the House subcommittee on telecommunications and Internet matters.
"NTIA realizes that this would likely result in consumer confusion," she added. If the high demand continues at its current rate of more than 1.5 million requests per week, the agency could run out of coupons in late January.
There are about 60 models of boxes to choose from, costing between $40 and $90, before the coupon, according to Consumers Union, which produces the magazine Consumer Reports.

Markey said Baker's response was worrying. "It is becoming increasingly clear that at minimum Congress may need to quickly pass additional funding for the converter box program in early January," he said in a statement.

NOVA: The Spy Factory
Airs Friday, February 6 at 2:30 am on WTTW11 and WTTW Digital (HD)

For the first time on television, NOVA exposes the hidden world of high-tech, 21st-century eavesdropping carried out by the National Security Agency (NSA). Today, the NSA is the world's largest intelligence agency, three times the size of the CIA and far more secret. Its mission is to eavesdrop on the world - from cell phones in Europe to pay phones in Afghanistan to email messages from Pakistan to Baghdad. But since 9/11, it has also turned its giant ear inward, listening in without warrant on thousands of American citizens, many of whom are on the government's secret watch list, now more than half-a-million names long. Based on the latest best-seller by journalist James Bamford, 'Inside the Spy Factory' is a gripping investigation of the NSA, from its tragic failures leading up to the 9/11 attacks to its secret listening rooms currently installed in the nation's telecom networks. The program presents groundbreaking new evidence about how the agency listened in to the phone calls of key 9/11 plotters, yet failed to realize they were located in the U.S. To show how current eavesdropping technology works, NOVA traces the path of an email sent from Asia to the U.S. via fiber optic cables on the Pacific sea floor. From a beach in California, the email then travels to a telecom switching facility in San Francisco, where the cables are covertly duplicated, with one copy of everything - including the original email - going to the NSA's secret room and the other transmitted to its proper destination. This is a suspenseful and eye-opening report on the threat to privacy and the effectiveness of high-tech surveillance in the age of terrorism.

73 De Don KA9QJG

The recorded voice of Time and Frequency Station WWV has fallen silent. This with word that announcer Don Elliot Heald, of Atlanta, Georgia, who gave WWV its human touch passed away on Thursday, February 19th.

Known in the broadcast world as Don Elliot, Heald had distinguished career that ranged from work at Atlanta Georgia's WSB to his automated and internationally heard WWV broadcasts on shortwave. He was also the voice of the Audichron telephone dial-in Time-Weather-Temperature service and of the Protestant Hour radio show for over 40 years. For nearly five decades Heald narrated the televised Christmas Eve service from Atlanta's Episcopal Cathedral of St. Philip, where he served as a vestryman, junior warden and senior warden.

Heald was originally from Massachusetts, but came to Atlanta via Lakeland, Florida. He was a graduate of the University of Florida at Gainesville and began his broadcast career after graduation when he accepted a position at WRUF where remained for three years. In Atlanta he spent much of his spare time devoted to public service work with charities and civic clubs.

A Service of Celebration of Don Elliot Heald's life took place on Tuesday February 24th at the Cathedral of St. Philip. He is survived by his wife Sara Farmer Heald of Atlanta, GA; sons and daughters-in- law David and Deborah of Ponte Vedra Beach, Florida, Tom and Evelyn Heald and Frank and Mary Heald of Atlanta. Don Elliot Heald was 86.

Illinois' first annual Statewide Communications Interoperability Plan (SCIP) was issued on April 1, 2009 and is now available at http://www.state.il.us/iema/SCIP.asp . Of particular interest to scanner listeners are chapters 3 and 4, which contain quite a bit of frequency information - including the zone/mode layout of Illinois Terrorism Task Force (ITTF) talkgroups and 700/800 MHz interop channels in Starcom 21 radios. Annual reviews/updates to the SCIP will be conducted under the auspices of the Illinois Emergency Management Agency.

Yes, windmills are causing lots of problems in addition to false radar. Cell phones and GPS don't work, or work poorly. TV reception, especially digital, suffers. RF and audio noise increases. most locally refuse to follow FAA lighting regulations, and those that do create light pollution. Construction destroys the roads and drainage. Local all the companies have lied and cheated, and come very close to wrecking the already fragile economy. Taxpayers are ending up footing the entire bill for a failed experiment. Just another example of a government out of control.

A most interesting article about ingenuity and availability. The former wins the race for availability every time. Now the interesting question. Could not a country use this vehicle for Communications Operations Attacks (gotta be a better name for it) on our forces, spoofing our own radio shacks?

Could it be the AQ or others be using such tools to talk to each other?

The Great Brazilian Sat-Hack Crackdown
By Marcelo Soares 04.20.09

CAMPINAS, Brazil ☐ On the night of March 8, cruising 22,000 miles above the Earth, U.S. Navy communications satellite FLTSAT-8 suddenly erupted with illicit activity. Jubilant voices and anthems crowded the channel on a junkyard's worth of homemade gear from across vast and silent stretches of the Amazon: Ronaldo, a Brazilian soccer idol, had just scored his first goal with the Corinthians.

It was a party that won't soon be forgotten. Ten days later, Brazilian Federal Police swooped in on 39 suspects in six states in the largest crackdown to date on a growing problem here: illegal hijacking of U.S. military satellite transponders.

"This had been happening for more than five years," says Celso Campos, of the Brazilian Federal Police. "Since the communication channel was open, not encrypted, lots of people used it to talk to each other."

The practice is so entrenched, and the knowledge and tools so widely available, few believe the campaign to stamp it out will be quick or easy.

Much of this country's geography is remote, and beyond the reach of cellphone coverage, making American satellites an ideal, if illegal, communications option. The problem goes back more than a decade, to the mid-1990s, when Brazilian radio technicians discovered they could jump on the UHF frequencies dedicated to satellites in the Navy's Fleet Satellite Communication system, or FLTSATCOM. They've been at it ever since.

Truck drivers love the birds because they provide better range and sound than ham radios. Rogue loggers in the Amazon use the satellites to transmit coded warnings when authorities threaten to close in. Drug dealers and organized criminal factions use them to coordinate operations.

Today, the satellites, which pirates called "Bolinha" or "little ball," are a national phenomenon.

"It's impossible not to find equipment like this when we catch an organized crime gang," says a police officer involved in last month's action.

The crackdown, called "Operation Satellite," was Brazil's first large-scale enforcement against the problem. Police followed coordinates provided by the U.S. Department of Defense and confirmed by Anatel, Brazil's FCC. Among those charged were university professors, electricians, truckers and farmers, the police say. The suspects face up to four years and jail, but are more likely to be fined if convicted.

First lofted into orbit in the 1970s, the FLTSATCOM bird was at the time a major advance in military communications. Their 23 channels were used by every branch of the U.S. armed forces and the White House for encrypted data and voice, typically from portable ground units that could be quickly unpacked and put to use on the battlefield.

As the original FLTSAT constellation of four satellites fell out of service, the Navy launched a more advanced UFO satellite (for Ultra High Frequency Follow-On) to replace them. Today, there are two FLTSAT and eight UFO birds in geosynchronous orbit. Navy contractors are working on a next-generation system called Mobile User Objective System beginning in September 2009.

Until then, the military is still using aging FLTSAT and UFO satellites ☐ and so are a lot of Brazilians. While the technology on the transponders still dates from the 1970s, radio sets back on Earth have only improved and plummeted in cost ☐ opening a cheap, efficient and illegal backdoor.

To use the satellite, pirates typically take an ordinary ham radio transmitter, which operates in the 144- to 148-MHZ range, and add a frequency doubler cobbled from coils and a varactor diode. That lets the radio stretch into the lower end of FLTSATCOM's 292- to 317-MHz uplink range. All the gear can be bought near any truck stop for less than $500. Ads on specialized websites offer to perform the conversion for less than $100. Taught the ropes, even rough electricians can make Bolinha-ware.

"I saw it more than once in truck repair shops," says amateur radio operator Adinei Brochi (PY2ADN) "Nearly illiterate men rigged a radio in less than one minute, rolling wire on a coil."

Brochi, who assembled his first radio set from spare parts at 12, has been tracking the Brazilian satellite hacking problem (.pdf) for years.

Brochi says the Pentagon's concerns are obvious.

"If a soldier is shot in an ambush, the first thing he will think of doing will be to send a help request over the radio," observes Brochi. "What if he's trying to call for help and two truckers are discussing soccer? In an emergency, that soldier won't be able to remember quickly how to change the radio programming to look for a frequency that's not saturated."

When real criminals use these frequencies, it's easy to tell they're hiding something, but it's nearly impossible to know what it is. In one intercepted conversation posted to YouTube, a man alerts a friend that he should watch out, because things are getting "crispy" and "strong winds" are on their way.

Sometimes loggers refer to the approach of authorities by saying, "Santa Claus is coming," says Brochi.

When the user's location is stable, the signal can be triangulated. That's how the Defense Department got the coordinates to feed Brazilian authorities in March's raids.

While Brazil may be the world capital of FLTSATCOM hijacking, there have been cases in other countries ☐ even in the United States. In February of last year, FCC investigators used a mobile direction-finding vehicle to trace rogue transmissions to a Brazilian immigrant in New Jersey. When the investigators inspected his radio gear, they found a transceiver programmed to a FLTSAT frequency, connected to an antenna in the back of his house. Joaquim Barbosa was hit with a $20,000 fine.

A technician with Anatel, speaking on condition of anonymity, says the chief problem with ending the satellite abuse in this country is that U.S. and Brazilian authorities simply waited too long to start. Thousands of users are believed to have the know-how to use the system. After a bust, the airwaves always go quiet for a while, but the hijackers always return.

One week after the "Operation Satellite," Brochi met with Wired.com at a gathering of amateur radio enthusiasts in a bucolic square in Campinas, about 60 miles north of Sao Paulo. Brochi switches on his UHF receiver and scans through the satellite frequencies.

It's relatively quiet now on the satellite underground, except for the static-like sound of encrypted military traffic. But eventually, a lone creaky voice cuts through. It's a man in Porto Velho, the capital of Rondônia, a day's drive north into the upper Amazon basin. He's making small talk with a friend in Portuguese. The satellite pirates are creeping back on the air.

Amateur radio operators, of which I am one, have been uses similar technology for decades. A satellite transponder has an uplink range of frequencies which are rebroadcasted on another set of frequencies. Since military tactical satellite frequencies (which are in the same area as military aviation) in the 200 to 400 MHz band, it is not all that hard. Now there are other frequencies for satellites around 2 GHz and 5 GHz. Military air and TACSAT frequencies are right in the middle of the most common amateur radio VHF and UHF bands which are also used for amateur satellites (generally uplink on 440 MHz and downlink on 144 MHz bands).

The question is why commercial satellite transponders are not being hacked. It could be that they are at 1800 to 2200 MHz or above 5 GHz. Or they have some form of password protection that limits uplinking. That the hackers can use TACSAT transponders is bad enough. However this also means that anyone with with a high power transmitter (at least 100 Watts) and a high gain antenna could overload the uplink frequencies thus putting the transponder out of commission.

Back in WW2 the typical US soldier was a farm boy who was used to improvising equipment. Now so many new troops have never had to make anything and tend to be fearful of those who can can think out of the box. In much of the world there still are those who can do "farm boy engineering".

The real problem is the growing use of amateur radio equipment for illegal communictions. At what point would governments start banning amateur radio like they now do guns?

MT Air show Issue Posted Online

For those of you who do not subscribe to Monitoring Times magazine and missed the March issue, the 10th Annual MT Airshow Guide for 2009 has been posted to the web. You can get complete details at
Of course, it is free of charge and is only available in the Adobe pdf format.

http://mt-milcom.blogspot.com/

I would also like to publicly thank the real heroes of the guide, the radio Monitors who took the time to share with me what they have heard at each air show. Without these caring radio hobbyists, there would be no guide. So if You would like to help and you have found the guide useful, how about taking a minute of two to pass along what you have heard. It is real important that we hear from the field and I can't make many shows (we don't have a budget for that sort of thing) ;-)))

So we need to hear from you who attend the shows. Even if it is on our list pass it along anyway. It all goes in the mix to help compile the next year's list. Any major changes, updates and corrections always appear on our Milcom Monitoring Post blog (http://mt-milcom.blogspot.com) so before you head out for a show, check there for the latest.

Again to those who contributed frequencies, input and pics to the 2009 Guide, a million thanks. I dedicate this latest issue to you all.

BTW -- if you are looking for an up-to-date listing of NORAD freqs for the East/West sectors etc, don't miss the June issue of MT. We have the absolute latest in our monthly Milcom column.

73 and good hunting,

Jefe

The software has a raft of features, including worldwide mapping, and includes over 200,000 map points, such as airports, VOR, NDB, and roads. An active Internet connection allows the program to download flight information received by other users from the AirNav Systems network, and use that data to further update your display. In addition to being displayed on the "radar" display, the flight information is also displayed to the left on a flight list showing the flight number, aircraft registration number, and other information.

Hello to other members, I've been listening to my RadioShack Pro-2050 TrunkTracker scanner 300 channels since 1998/99 when I got it. I also have a handheld RadioShack Pro-83 200 channel scanner I live in Princeton,IN. and have always gotten Vincennes police frequencies,even when they went trunk 800. Now I can't get them at all, I went to Radio Reference and didn't see any trunk 800 for police,are they back on 154.875,because I have that added to my scanner and don't hear anything or have they gone digital? Any answers on this welcomed, btw I have all their 800 freqs written down. Plus can anyone who lives in Gibson County or close to G.C. get the Henderson,KY state police on their scanner, I have the freqs. just can't get them. Thanks-Cindy :)

There is no way i am going to pay 500-600 dollars for a scanner. Is there anyway a person can pick up the digital freq. with it. I hate to just see it setting there and not picking up the police.

I am not familiar with the BC860XL but from the tone of your question I gather that the 860XL does not support digital reception. Therefore there is nothing you can do with the unit other than listen to analog radio traffic or use it as a door stop. To receive digital radio traffic you must have a scanner which is capable of receiving such. Sorry about that.

Subject: RE: [BC246T] Charging Ckt

I did some testing and repaired the Radio Uniden 246 T Scanner

Here was the problem I thought I would post it in case someone else might make the same mistake I did.

The radio is out of warranty and has always worked great , I wanted to make My own DC Auto adapter So last night I had went to Radio Shack looking for the DC Plug to fit the Radio I had everything else .

Well if anyone has been to radio shack they have in a Bundle about 20 Different Plugs with cables to determine which one is right for the Radio, Well some are very close So I was just pushing them in and trying to find the right one, Well in doing that I had Accidently without knowing pushed Hard and the Gnd inside the radio from the Plug came unsoldered.

I bought the right Plug came home and Put it on my homemade Auto adapter 6 Volt at 500 Miils

Well I tested it with the Fluke Digital Meter the Polarity and Voltage was good so I plugged it in. NO Smoke the Battery Icon was still flashing and beeping. So I thought I had burnt the Radio up.

But after Justin told Me it should work without the Batteries , I Got out My big Mag Light and took the Radio apart I found the Gnd side of the Plug had come unsoldered , So I re soldered it Put it back together and It works Fine with the ac Adapter and My Homemade one for the Car .

At My age I don't see or Solder as good as I use to So My advice is unless You are Familiar with SMD Work and all the precautions don't do it .

Don't be cheap like me buy the Factory Adapter.

Great Little Scanner

Happy Scanning

APRS information will be sent over 144.39 MHz every minute under the call sign, W9YJ-11.

The helium filled balloon will reach a float altitude of 70000 feet (21.5km) about 15:00 UT and will attempt to float at this altitude for about three hours. During this time the balloon should travel slowly to the NW from about 40.0N & 87.8W to 40.1 N & 88.1 W. The descent will begin about 18:00 UT on a slowly deflating balloon with landing about 19:30 UT.

The uplink frequency on the radio will be 144.36 MHz, and the downlink frequency will be 446.025 MHz.

The Scouts will be using the call sign WB9SA. If you have a chance to contact the station, the Scouts will be thrilled to make the contact! You may also attempt to use the repeater for a long distance Earth-Balloon-Earth contact with hams from larger distances.

Thanks to Howard Brooks, KC9QBN, Professor of Physics & Astronomy at DePauw University, W9YJ for making this happen!!!

If you are in the IL/IN area you might catch ATV from our first balloon going up (100,000 ft) at 8:20 AM CDT Saturday from Rantoul IL 430 Mhz, with a CW call "DE WB9SA"

A big thank you, to all the hams radio operators making www.spacejamboree.com the coolest Scout Technology event in the Central USA!!!!! THANK YOU Howard! Thank you VCARA, ARISS, ARRL Foundation Contributors, NASA, Richard Garriott, West Mountain Radio, PolyCom, 323.tv, Mike and Dave (our welders) and DePauw University.

I had this sent to me by My Brother Ret AF , I really enjoyed watching it and Listening to the Communications and seeing how much has changed now it sure brought back a lot of Memories of The Space Program , This being the 40 Th Anniversary of the Moon landing

Some of the Older Members will recall like Me just setting and listening to the audio it was a Big thing , a few Ham repeaters were rebroadcasting it That sure put the repeaters to a test to see how well they were made .

That was one of the questions on the Exam when is it legal to rebroadcast Music in Ham radio , and of course when it is from NASA

It looks like it came from the JFK Library and it is interactive Which means We can move it to different parts .

I thought I would also share the link

20-year-old pretended to be at control center, prosecutors say
Feds accuse man of giving trains false instructions
RUPA SHENOY - The Associated Press | Posted: Tuesday, August 4, 2009 12:00 am
CHICAGO | A man accused of transmitting on Chicago Transit Authority frequencies more than 300 times and once even sending instructions for a train to ignore a stop signal could have endangered thousands of lives, federal prosecutors said Monday, .
Marcel Carter, 20, is charged with violating a U.S. code that forbids interference with transportation operators. A federal complaint alleges he began using a radio to transmit on CTA frequencies in June 2008, often interjecting comments during communications between the agency's control center and train operators.
CTA spokeswoman Noelle Gaffney said Carter's directions were never followed.
The federal complaint says that, on June 2, 2009, Carter impersonated a train operator and said over CTA frequencies that he was approaching a stop in Chicago's Logan Square neighborhood. When someone at the control center asked him to identify himself, Carter impersonated another person at the control center and told the train operator to disregard a stop signal, citing two specific CTA rules. Prosecutors say that, at the time, another train was approaching the stop.
On another occasion, Carter pretended to be at the control center and told a train conductor to wait at a stop for one minute and disregard earlier instructions to wait three minutes, according to the complaint. Dispatchers often tell operators to wait at stops to increase spacing between trains or decrease the risk of collisions.
Gaffney said Carter used a radio he bought and it was obvious he was an impostor because he didn't know the agency's lingo. Gaffney said employees always overrode Carter's directions.
But, she said, "We were concerned of the potential of someone listening to his instructions."
The agency eventually was able to block Carter's signals, Gaffney said.
Officials said Carter was arrested Friday when he and his brother asked a CTA employee at a train station if there was a reward for a stolen radio. The employee put Carter on the phone with a dispatcher who recognized Carter's voice and kept him talking until police arrived, Gaffney said.
Judge Morton Denlow set Carter's bond at $4,500, put him under the supervision of his mother, Janis Merriweather, and told him not to use broadcasting devices.
Merriweather told Denlow that her son was unemployed and looking for a job. She told reporters after the hearing that Carter didn't know that what he was doing was illegal. His attorney, Piyush Chandra, declined to comment.

Carter faces up to 20 years in prison and a fine of $250,000 if convicted.

NASA speeds moon communication to near real-time

Wave amplifier enables lunar orbiter to transmit massive amounts of data at 100 Mb/second
Sharon Gaudin

August 20, 2009 (Computerworld) How often do you go to make a call on your cell phone and you're stymied by a bad connection?

Consider trying to make that call from ... well, the moon.

NASA engineers did when they were setting up the communications system that would send massive amounts of data from the Lunar Reconnaissance Orbiter across 238,000 miles back to Earth. Agency officials described the new system to reporters yesterday.

NASA's Lunar Reconnaissance Orbiter was launched from Cape Canaveral Air Force Station in Florida on June 18. A second satellite, the Lunar Crater Observation and Sensing Satellite, lifted off at the same time.

NASA scientists are hoping the two satellites can provide them with new information about the moon. NASA has been planning on putting humans back on the moon by 2020 but those plans are in flux giving the current economic conditions and the Obama administration's review of NASA's space missions.

NASA officials say that getting more information about moon will be key to any return there.

The Reconnaissance Orbiter is expected to orbit about 31 miles above the surface of the moon for the next year as part of an effort to map the moon's surface and find a good landing site for future NASA manned missions there. The orbiter is designed to compile high-resolution 3-D maps of the moon's surface and survey it at many different spectral wavelengths.

According to NASA, the orbiter will amass more information about the moon's surface and environment than any previous mission.

The issue has been how to get all of that data back to scientists on Earth where it could do them some good.

To make that happen, NASA is depending on a 13-inch-long tube, called a Traveling Wave Tube Amplifier, which was built by L-3 Communications Electron Technologies. It's designed to enable the orbiter to send massive amounts of images and data at an "unusually fast" rate to a receiver at a K-band antenna network at White Sands Test Facility in New Mexico. It's the first high-data rate K-band transmitter to fly on a NASA spacecraft, according to the space agency.

Because of the amplifier, the orbiter should be able to transmit 461 gigabytes of data per day, NASA noted, adding that it's more information than is generally found in a four-story library. And it transmits the information at a rate of up to 100 megabytes per second, compared to a typical high-speed Internet service of about 1 to 3 megabytes per second.

"We're sending back more data than ever, and it's nearly real time," said project manager Todd Peterson in an interview today.

According to NASA, the device is a vacuum with electrodes inside that are geared to amplify microwave signals to high power. It's a good set up for sending large amounts of data over a long distance because it provides more power and more efficiency than the traditional transistor amplifier, NASA noted.

NASA has used Traveling Wave Tube Amplifiers in other missions - notably with Kepler and Cassini - but they weren't as powerful. With the amplifier for the lunar orbiter, engineers redesigned the circuitry and built it by hand.

RadioShack Invites Consumers to Rediscover 'THE SHACK' Through New Brand Creative Platform --Integrated Media Campaign to Contemporize the Brand and Reinforce RadioShack's Authority in Innovative Products, Leading Brands and Knowledgeable Associates

FORT WORTH, Texas, Aug 03, 2009 /PRNewswire-FirstCall via COMTEX News Network/ -- RadioShack Corporation (NYSE: RSH) will unveil its new brand creative platform, "THE SHACK," on August 6, supported by an integrated television, print and digital media schedule, as well as a high-profile, three-day launch event taking place in New York City and San Francisco. The new creative was developed by Butler, Shine, Stern and Partners of Sausalito, CA, which was named the Company's creative agency of record in April.

"Trust is a critical attribute of any successful retailer, and the reality is that most people trust friends, not corporations. When a brand becomes a friend, it often gets a nickname - take FedEx or Coke, for example. Our customers, associates and even the investor community have long referred to RadioShack as 'THE SHACK,' so we decided to embrace that fact and share it with the world," said Lee Applbaum, RadioShack's Chief Marketing Officer. "This creative is not about changing our name. Rather, we're contemporizing the way we want people to think about our brand. THE SHACK speaks to consumers in a fresh, new voice and distinctive creative look that reinforces RadioShack's authority in innovative products, leading brands and knowledgeable, helpful associates."

"We have tremendous equity in consumers' minds around cables, parts and batteries, but it's critically important that we help them to understand the role that we play in keeping people connected in this highly mobile world," added Applbaum. "You will see a real focus on mobility and wireless products from leading brands in our new advertising."

RadioShack announced last month the addition of T-Mobile to its lineup of wireless carriers in 4,000 stores as part of its strategy to increase its authority and share in mobility and connectivity.

"We've partnered with RadioShack to develop a creative platform that will cause people to take another look at THE SHACK. Everything about the advertising - the media, format, style, music and tone - will contribute to a new interpretation of the brand," said Greg Stern, BSSP's Chief Executive Officer. "Everyone knows RadioShack. Our job is to communicate what THE SHACK stands for today."

RadioShack also announced a partnership with seven-time Tour de France winner, Lance Armstrong, both to sponsor his new American Pro-Tour cycling team and to work with the Lance Armstrong Foundation and LIVESTRONG campaign in the global fight against cancer.

"This is an exciting time at RadioShack," added Applbaum. "The announcement about Lance and Team RadioShack generated a great deal of consumer excitement and a reappraisal of our brand, which is exactly what THE SHACK is intended to do. Having Lance on our team will no doubt accelerate our brand's evolution."

To bring the new creative strategy to life, RadioShack will host Netogether, a three-day event taking place in New York City's Times Square and San Francisco's Justin Herman Plaza on August 6, 7 and 8. The event will connect the cities with two, massive, 17-foot laptop computers with webcams that allow live video and audio exchanges. Netogether will feature live music, celebrity appearances and unique contests to demonstrate how technology can keep people connected - even 3,000 miles apart. Consumers are invited to visit the event and chat with friends or family via the laptops, or to join in the conversation online at www.radioshack.com/theshack, where they can offer real-time comments on the live video feeds.

Arrest Puts Focus on Protesters' Texting

By COLIN MOYNIHAN
New York Times
Published: October 5, 2009

As demonstrations have evolved with the help of text messages and online social networks, so too has the response of law enforcement.
On Thursday, F.B.I. agents descended on a house in Jackson Heights, Queens, and spent 16 hours searching it. The most likely reason for the raid: a man who lived there had helped coordinate communications among protesters at the Group of 20 summit in Pittsburgh.

The man, Elliot Madison, 41, a social worker who has described himself as an anarchist, had been arrested in Pittsburgh on Sept. 24 and charged with hindering apprehension or prosecution, criminal use of a communication facility and possession of instruments of crime. The Pennsylvania State Police said he was found in a hotel room with computers and police scanners while using the social-networking site Twitter to spread information about police movements. He has denied wrongdoing.

American protesters first made widespread use of mass text messages in New York, during the 2004 Republican National Convention, when hundreds of people used a system called TXTmob to share information. Messages, sent as events unfolded, allowed demonstrators and others to react quickly to word of arrests, police mobilizations and roving rallies. Mass texting has since become a valued tool among protesters, particularly at large-scale demonstrations. And police and government officials appear to be increasingly aware of such methods of communication. In 2008, for instance, the New York City Law Department issued a subpoena seeking information from the graduate student who created the code for TXTmob. Still, Mr. Madison, who was released on bail shortly after his arrest, may be among the first to be charged criminally while sending information electronically to protesters about the police.

A criminal complaint in Pennsylvania accuses him of "directing others, specifically protesters of the G-20 summit, in order to avoid apprehension after a lawful order to disperse."

"He and a friend were part of a communications network among people protesting the G-20," Mr. Madison's lawyer, Martin Stolar, said on Saturday. "There's absolutely nothing that he's done that should subject him to any criminal liability."

A search warrant executed by the F.B.I. at Mr. Madison's house authorized agents and officers looking for violations of federal rioting laws to seize computers and phones, black masks and clothes and financial records and address books. Among the items seized, according to a list prepared by the agents, were electronic equipment, newspapers, books and gas masks. The items also included what was described as a picture of Lenin.

Since the raid, no other charges have been filed against Mr. Madison. On Friday, Mr. Stolar argued in Federal District Court in Brooklyn that the warrant was vague and overly broad. Judge Dora L. Irizarry ordered the authorities to stop examining the seized materials until Oct. 16, pending further orders.

Mr. Stolar said that the reason for the Jackson Heights raid would not be clear until an affidavit used to secure the search warrant was unsealed. But he said that commentary among agents indicated that it was related to Mr. Madison's arrest in Pittsburgh, where he participated in the Tin Can Comms Collective, a group of people who collected information and used Twitter to send mass text messages describing protest-related events that they observed on the streets.
There were many such events during the two days of the summit. Demonstrators marched through town on the opening day of the gathering, at times breaking windows and fleeing. And on both nights, police officers fired projectiles and hurled tear gas canisters at students milling near the University of Pittsburgh.

After Mr. Madison's arrest, other Tin Can participants continued to send messages, now archived on Twitter's Web site. Many of those messages tracked police movements. One read: "SWAT teams rolling down 5th Ave." Another read: "Report received that police are `nabbing' anyone that looks like a protester / Black Bloc. Stay alert watch your friends!"

But even as protesters were watching the police, it appeared that the police were monitoring the protesters' communications.
Just after 1 p.m. on Sept. 24, a text message stated: "A comms facility was raided, but we are still fully operational please continue to submit reports." Nine hours later, a text read: "Scanner just said be advised we're being monitored by anarchists through scanner."

On Sunday night Mr. Madison said that the search of his home was an effort to "stifle dissent," and added that several groups in Pittsburgh, including the summit organizers, had used Twitter accounts to describe events related to the meetings.

"They arrested me for doing the same thing everybody else was doing, which was perfectly legal," he said. "It was crucial for people to have the information we were sending."

Are you trying to improve on some weak signals? Recently I was able to test the Watson WRP-1300 Preamplifier. In my test I saw an improvement on weak analog/digital conventional signals and analog/digital trunking systems. You can add this preamp to your current antenna set up and you will be up and running within minutes. Along with the Watson WRP-1300 Preamp I would recommend purchasing the optional ac adapter (or it can be powered by optional 9-volt battery).

488. MARS Radio gets New Name

From: ka9qjg1
Topic: 488 Message: 488

FYI

Happy Holidays

Happy Scanning

Don KA9QJG

On Wednesday, December 23, the U.S. Department of Defense (DoD) issued an Instruction

concerning MARS, effective immediately. This Instruction gives the three MARS services -- Army, Air Force and Navy/Marine Corps -- a new focus on homeland security and a new name: Military Auxiliary Radio System. The Instruction is the first major revision to <http://www.arrl.org/news/files/dod46502_1988.doc> MARS since January 26, 1988 -- as such, the first revision since the 9/11 attacks and Hurricane Katrina, two major events that changed the way Amateur Radio dealt with emergency communications.

The DoD defines a "military auxiliary" as "an organized body of volunteers prepared to supplement the uniformed services or any designated civilian authorities by provision of specialized autonomous services when called upon or when situations warrant," and gives the Civil Air Patrol and Coast Guard Auxiliary as examples of auxiliaries.

In the past, MARS had focused primarily on emergency communications and health and welfare support. The DoD's Instruction now directs the three MARS services to provide "contingency radio communications" to support US government operations, DoD components and "civil authorities at all levels," providing for national security and emergency preparedness events. MARS units will still continue to provide health and welfare communications support "to military members, civilian employees and contractors of DoD Components, and civil agency employees and contractors, when in remote or isolated areas, in contingencies or whenever appropriate." MARS must also be capable of operation in "radio only" modes -- without landlines or the Internet -- and sustainable on emergency power (when public utility power has failed); some MARS stations must be transportable for timely deployment.

The Instruction, however, does not mention which of the three MARS services will take the lead when responding to events. According to sources, this has been seen as a critical issue in conforming to the National Incident Management System (NIMS) that calls for "unity of command." As now constituted, the three separate MARS services are supposed do "interoperate," but command-wise, each operates independently. Some MARS members had urged clarification on this issue to avoid confusion during an emergency, sources said.

The Secretaries of the Army, Air Force and Navy are to encourage participation in MARS, the Instruction states, saying this may be accomplished "by establishing and funding an active MARS program within each Military Department, which shall then assign a MARS-licensed staff representative to manage operations, readiness, planning, procedural and technical development, documentation, standards, training, equipment, program and membership administration, and other matters necessary for mission accomplishment."

The Secretaries are also tasked with bringing new personnel into their MARS services. The Instruction calls on them to establish programs "to promote civilian interest, recruit qualified volunteers, sponsor them for basic background checks and furnish them suitable training in contingency support communications."

The Instruction also dictates that MARS leaders will now report to three DoD officials; before this revision, they only reported to one person. The Assistant Secretary of Defense for Homeland Security and Americas Security Affairs (ASD [HD&ASA]) now has primary responsibility for the MARS Defense Support of Civil Authorities (DSCA) mission. In addition, MARS leaders will report to the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Networks and Information Integration/DoD Chief Information Officer (ASD[NII]/DoD CIO) and the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Logistics and Material Readiness (ASD[L&MR]). In the 1998 charter, oversight of MARS was assigned to a single top official, the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Command, Control, Communications and Intelligence.

This revision -- which was years in the making -- keeps the Navy/Marine Corps MARS intact; until now, members of this MARS service were concerned that their part of MARS might be terminated by Navy commanders.

The Instruction also gives some new perks to MARS members. Active duty military personnel who are affiliated with MARS may be able to earn Reserve points based on service in MARS and, in cases of permanent change of station, qualify for weight exemption for transportation of MARS communications equipment. All members may be considered for benefits associated with DoD civilian service, such as access to DoD morale, welfare and recreation Category C recreational facilities and access to DoD credit unions.

Membership in any of the three MARS services is open to qualified active duty, Guard and Reserve personnel, as well as those in civilian agencies who report to civil authorities or their supporting organizations (including nongovernmental organizations) and private US citizens who meet age, education and other criteria -- such as an FCC-issued Amateur Radio license -- imposed by a DoD Component MARS office.

10:05 AM CST, January 16, 2010
LAFAYETTE, Ind.

The state agency that gives out radio identification codes is running short of IDs, a situation some emergency officials worry could make communication difficult in crisis situations.

The Integrated Public Safety Commission has already assigned 52,000 of its 64,000 available IDs to radios serving mostly first-responders across Indiana and is on pace to run out by this fall.

The IDs enable radio operators to communicate across the state and outside a local network.

Commission implementation director Dave Smith says the demand for the frequencies has risen since 9/11 as more funding for public safety communication has become available.

"People might say we've been a victim of our own success," Smith said.

But Tippecanoe County emergency management director Mark Kirby says the commission is at fault because it granted many requests without questioning the need for them.

"Five years ago, there were hundreds and hundreds of them given out at a time," Kirby said. "Counties would ask for IDs and there were virtually no questions asked."

Kirby, whose request for state IDs for 19 new radios was denied, says he worries that the lack of IDs could hamper emergency responders if they travel outside the county.

Kirby has begun reviewing how the county's IDs are used at Smith's request but says it's hard to know who might need one with a state ID if an emergency arises.

Joe Whitaker, Fountain County emergency management director, said the state IDs are needed because the local system can cut off communication with people who are just five miles apart.

"It's very seldom used because it's not as good a system," he said of the local system. "On the state system, you can be in Indianapolis and still talk to a person in town here with no problem."

Whitaker just ordered 16 radios, to add to the county's stock of about 200, for police, fire and emergency medical services personnel.

"If they're filling up ... that really creates a problem for us," he said.

Smith said the Integrated Public Safety Commission hopes to expand the network to include up to 128,000 IDs. It will limit the IDs it assigns in the meantime.

499. Unlawful in Il to Rebroadcast Public Safety Communications

FYI

It is now Against the Law in Il To Rebroadcast Public safety Communications including radio or Internet

I know most of us in this Hobby are aware of all the Scanner Type Communications being linked d to the Internet. I always wondered about the legality of doing this especially living in one of the Few States that have an Anti Scanner Law against mobiles and Handhelds unless one is exempt.

I always liked the idea of seeing something big on the News and finding a site from that area to listen to it Live .

Well it looks like Il has put together a law against doing this I do not know about other states . Or how this is going to stop the On Line Scanner stations.

Also as written unless I have permission it looks like I cannot rebroadcast the Amber Alerts which come out over My Emerg Weather Receive on My Repeaters

This will be interesting to see if anyone is a actually charged with this

Don KA9QJG

Statutes Amended In Order of Appearance
20 ILCS 2615/11 new
20 ILCS 2615/12 new

Synopsis As Introduced
Amends the State Police Radio Act. Provides that a person receiving public safety voice or data communication transmitted via the facilities of the State's public safety radio system by wire or radio shall not, without the written authority of the originator of the communication, rebroadcast the communication via any means, including radio or Internet, or otherwise divulge or publish the existence, contents, substance, purport, effect, or meaning thereof. Provides that this provision does not apply to the public safety radio communication transmitted by any system station for the use of the general public, including Amber Alerts and other communications specifically intended for rebroadcast to the public. Provides that radio access to the public safety radio system within the State may only be accomplished upon receipt of written authorization granted by the appropriately licensed authority. Provides that a violation of these provisions is a Class A misdemeanor. Effective immediately.

Interesting audio quality tests with various p25/analog radios under various noise conditions conducted by firefighters of Maple Bluff, WI FD.

http://www.maplebluffire.com/videos/Narrowband-radio-test

Prior to January 1, 2013, emergency service departments nationwide will need to comply with the new FCC narrowband guidelines. On February 24, 2010 the Maple Bluff Fire Department (MBFD), in Dane County WI, performed an unbiased and impartial radio test. We compared the sound quality of the Kenwood TK-5210, Motorola XTS-2500, Motorola XTS-5000, Motorola APX-7000, EF Johnson SL 5100, Tait 9135, and ICOM 9011 under normal firefighter work conditions. These radios were tested in Digital and Analog modes. The Maple Bluff Fire Department is not endorsing any particular manufacturer, vendor, or radio type, and realize there are radios on the market that were not tested. The radios seen in this test were selected by availability at the time of the test. We hope this video is useful and informative for you and your department.

Posted: Friday, March 12, 2010

SPRINGFIELD ☐ People who unlawfully rebroadcast information found on police scanners could be charged with a misdemeanor under legislation that was approved by the Illinois House on Friday.

State Rep. Dan Brady, R-Bloomington, sponsored the legislation. He said state police were concerned that people are using information broadcast over scanners in a malicious manner.

"What they (the state police) want is certain protection under the law of people who pirate the transmissions, do illegal things and jeopardize public safety," he said.

Scott Compton, spokesperson for the Illinois State Police, said the issue hasn't been a problem for police in the past but could become one because people can freely rebroadcast audio on the Internet. The intent is to outlaw people from using the information to undermine police efforts in capturing criminals.

A previous version of the legislation came under fire from media advocates who worried the provision would bar journalists from reporting what they hear over the air.

Media outlets often listen to broadcasts transmitted by police and fire departments, ambulance and rescue agencies, and the National Weather Service, among others. The information may help them report on traffic accidents, fires or weather emergencies.

But Brady has since clarified the legislation to make sure it was clear media outlets were exempt from its provisions.

The Illinois Press Association, which represents the state's print and broadcast news outlets, retracted its opposition to the legislation after the changes were put in place.

"They've taken out all of the information we were opposed to," spokeswoman Beth Bennett said.

The proposal also exempts residents who monitor scanner traffic from home for information or entertainment.

The House approved the bill on a 110-0 vote, and the legislation now moves to the Senate.

The legislation is House Bill 5194.

This passed in Il I think it will also spread to other States

RadioShack's next act could be a sale Commentary: Electronics retailer reportedly looking for a way out
By MarketWatch

NEW YORK (MarketWatch) -- Looks like someone may be about to put RadioShack out of its misery.

Citing people close to the situation, a report in the New York Post said the consumer-electronics retailer (NYSE:RSH) is exploring strategic alternatives, including selling itself. Read New York Post story on RadioShack.

A shopper browses mobile phones displayed at a Radio Shack store.

The company has been shopping itself around as a leveraged buyout play to private-equity firms, or it may be considering a merger with Best Buy Co. (NYSE:BBY) , the largest U.S. electronics retailer, the report said.

RadioShack shares soared in Friday morning trading.

RadioShack Corp. struggled for years to right its business. The company was posting losses, declining sales and weak margins. It implemented a sweeping restructuring, shut underperforming stores, cut jobs and freshened merchandise and named turnaround expert and retail veteran Julian Day to run the company. Things seemed to be on the right track.

Then the recession hit. It's tried to focus on its wireless offerings and promote its smaller size as a differentiator amid a sea of big-box stores. The Fort Worth, Texas-based company has done major store overhauls and last summer tried rebranding itself as "The Shack."

Meanwhile, as RadioShack has floundered, Best Buy has thrived.

Best Buy just posted a better-than-expected 37% jump in fiscal

Is this link correct? I keep landing on an ATT web page and just about everything states that content is blocked.

Hi All,

I was interested in setting up my 396 T for Indiana Systems. I have a lot of the data set up from Radio Reference using the paste utility on ProScan.

I would like to set up the systems more by County with Morgan, Putnam, Clay, Montgomery, Vigo, Owen, Parke, etc. Example Hendricks County as a system and either PD and Fires as groups, or maybe even communities as groups, ex: Plainfield, Brownsburg, Danville, etc.

As for Meca set that up with IPD and then each community and other agencies as groups.

ISP as a system and Putnamville, Indianapolis, Bloomington and Terre Haute posts as groups and then other state agencies DHS, etc as groups too. Does that make sense?

I've started to work on this and have several configurations in ProScan if someone wants the files I can send them.

Thanks,

Ray

Its my understanding as A retired Trooper that the ISP now does Centralized Dispatch no dispatching occurs at the Putnamville or Terre haute Post all of it has been moved to Bloomington post .. so now a trooper in Rockville is dispatched from Bloomington who probably has no idea what Rockville looks like..I imagine this is occurring all over the state since the Governor is trying to cut cost.
all those dispatchers out of a job especially the ones not able to retire.

check into it further

Might change the way you program your system..

Hi Pierre,

Thanks for the information. I would assume the Trooper in Rockville, knows what Rockville looks maybe not the Bloomington Post, although I think Rockville is under Lafayette Post, I may be wrong there.

I used to live in Indiana and will be going back for a week in May and was hoping to program the scanner as such. I will try to post to the Radio Reference Group as the Indiana Yahoo Scanner Groups are essentially dead. I was hoping someone had some Scanner Files that I could Program the scanner with. I use ProScan, UASD, Free Scan and Scan Control. I have 396T and may upgrade to a 396XT due to it's multi-site capability.

I live in New England and have posted my files for my area to my local groups and repost when I make changes.

Thank you Pierre, for your reply.

528. OPERATION OF CERTAIN WIRELESS MICROPHONES IS PROHIBITED AFTER JUNE 12, 2010

FYI
Just in case You Monitor or use one Also nice info to add to Your Freq List

Happy Scanning

Don KA9QJG

Under a new FCC rule, anyone who uses a wireless microphone. or similar device, that operates in the 700 MHz Band will have to stop operating their wireless microphone, or similar device, no later than June 12, 2010. To see if this law affects your wireless microphone, check our Manufacturers Equipment list at http://www.fcc.gov/cgb/wirelessmicrophones/manufacturers.html.

All users of 700 MHz Band wireless microphones and similar devices - including theaters, churches, schools, conference centers, theme parks, sports leagues, and musicians - will need to retune or replace, if necessary, their equipment no later than June 12, 2010. Wireless microphones that operate outside of the 700 MHz Band are not affected.

Certain wireless microphones have operated in frequencies that are needed for public safety. When these microphones were first designed, the frequencies they used were in between the frequencies that television stations used to broadcast television programs. With the completion of the digital television (DTV) transition on June 12, 2009, television stations no longer use the frequencies between 698 and 806 MHz (the 700 MHz Band) for broadcast. These frequencies are now being used by public safety entities, such as police, fire and emergency services, and by commercial providers of wireless services, such as wireless broadband services.

The wireless microphones that had been operating in the old TV broadcast channels can cause harmful interference to these public safety and wireless consumer services. Therefore, all users of wireless microphones -- or certain low power auxiliary stations -- that operate on any of the frequencies in the 700 MHz band - including both licensed users and unlicensed users - now have to stop operating in this band. Because of the danger of interference with important radio communications services, continued use of wireless microphones in the 700 MHz band after June 12, 2010 may subject operators to severe penalties, including fines and imprisonment.

The FCC is only prohibiting the use of wireless microphones and similar devices that operate in the 700 MHz Band. You may continue to use wireless microphones and similar devices that operate on other broadcast frequencies. Microphones and other similar devices with cords are not affected by the FCC's decision.

Similar devices to wireless microphones are also known as equipment for "low power auxiliary stations". Typically these devices can transmit over distances of 100 meters. Examples of similar devices include wireless intercoms, wireless in-ear monitors (IEM"), wireless audio instrument links, and wireless cueing equipment. (also known as IFB).

For more information check out our Wireless Microphone Publications at http://www.fcc.gov/cgb/wirelessmicrophones/Pubs.html and Frequently Asked Questions at http://www.fcc.gov/cgb/wirelessmicrophones/FAQs.html.

Home Patrol Scanner

Here are some excerpts from the Radio Reference article. I'll post the link at the bottom for those interested in reading the entire article:

The only thing you will need to know to program a "HomePatrol" scanner is ☐ wait for it ☐ the Zip Code where you are currently located. Yes, you punch in your zip code on the LCD touch screen, press enter, and you will instantly start hearing local scanner communications (conventional and trunked, analog and digital). No other operator interface is needed and it is truly just that simple.

Maybe you don't want to monitor civilian or military air comms that got loaded when you punched in your zip code, just police, fire and EMS. No problem: touch the screen to set up what you want to hear and it is done. No banks, no systems, no groups, no programming of frequencies: your location is all you need to get you started.

If you are traveling and you have a GPS, plug that puppy into the "HomePatrol" scanner and it will ensure that your unit has up-to-date frequencies for the area you are traveling in. You don't have to do anything except to make sure that the GPS is working and plugged into the "HomePatrol." Of course you will have to supply the GPS unit since it is not included with the "HomePatrol" scanner.

I'm not local to the area but I would guess that they've moved to the 'new' state wide trunked system called Project Hoosier SAFE-T. There is information on the system at http://www.radioreference.com/apps/db/?sid=933

Unfortunately your current scanner isn't compatible with the new system. The few scanners on the market that will work are fairly pricey (around $500 last I checked.. maybe they've come down a bit.)

If you decide you're in the market for a new scanner Uniden just announced a new one called the "Home Patrol" that is capable of receiving the Project Hoosier SAFE-T system. The Home Patrol looks to be pretty interesting since it contains a database of radio frequencies and all you need to program it is your zip code. There's information on it at http://homepatrol.com/

Again.. I'm not local to Bedford so I'm only guessing that they've moved off the old frequencies to the new system. Someone more familar with the area will probably be able to confirm for you.

Indiana Project Hoosier SAFE-T Motorola Type II SmartZone Omnilink Statewide

Thanks for the assistance. Edward

545. Railroad Radio Narrowbanding

Yahoo group: ScanIndiana

From: ka9qjg1
Topic: 545 Message: 545

Here is some info for our RR Scanner buffs

CSX wideband-to-narrowband radio changeover schedule released
Published: September 21, 2010

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. ☐ CSX has announced its timetable for transitioning from wideband (25 KHz) to narrowband (12.5 KHz) railroad radio operation, the American Short Line & Regional Railroad Association reported. It is the first Class I railroad to furnish this information for dissemination. The Federal Communications Commission (FCC) has mandated the end of wideband two-way radio transmission for non-military purposes in the U.S. after Jan. 1, 2013. [See Technology, October 2010 TRAINS] The CSX timetable presently calls for the changeover to be completed entirely in 2011.

CSX will transition by operating division, as follows:

April 2011: Atlanta, Florence, Jacksonville, and Nashville Divisions

June 2011: Great Lakes, Huntington, and Louisville Divisions

September 2011: Albany, Baltimore, and Chicago Divisions

The action will have a cascading effect on other railroads. For example, a short line or regional railroad connecting with CSX will need to match the changeover schedule if it interchanges cars or uses CSX trackage rights. While connecting railroads may want to transition their entire railroad at that time, they may have to temporarily maintain two radio systems if they connect with another Class I that has not yet changed from wide to narrowband.

Happy Scanning

Please join Mike Kohl and me for another Sat Talk Live radio show tonight at 9 pm ET. As I announced last week, we have a new call-in number.

Phone Number: 760-569-7676
Access Number: 558556# (a little longer than the old one)

Should you get a recording that the line is temporarily not available, the line is not in service, or a busy signal, call the back-up number 805-360-1075.

When asked, enter the phone number and access code from above and you are routed to the right conference room. You will hear music-on-hold if you are the first caller. As soon a second caller joins the music goes away.

This should work with POTS, Skype, Jack or any other VoIP service.

The preceding program, This Week in Radio Technology, is only 1 hour and 15 minutes long this week. That means I will on the call bridge at about 8:15 pm ET and we can have a pre-show!

I hope ya'll have the time to listen and participate.

Ralf

GRE Introduces Next Generation Digital P25 Scanning Receiver.

Belmont, CA, January 06, 2011 --(PR.com)-- GRE America introduces a number of firsts in radio scanners with the new GRECOM Digital EZ Scan scanner. This scanner:

1) Uses patented technology to permit programming by simply selecting what you want to hear, no need to be a radio system expert.

2) Works in areas supported by the vast majority of APCO P25 digital as well as analog and conventional public service radio systems.

3) It allows the user to listen to desired communications without PC or internet programming because everything is already in the scanner. The Digital EZ Scan scanner includes a 2GB SD card with the entire US database of trunked systems and popular conventional frequencies so customers can monitor popular local police/fire and emergency frequencies right out of the box.

4) This Radio scanning receiver comes ready to program by the consumer for any USA/Canada location. No longer must users become radio system experts to enjoy the scanning hobby. And this scanning receiver can be updated with the latest database at any time by a simple PC connection.

In the past, scanning your local police, fire and emergency services required that you know the radio band used, radio system type and required an understanding of the programming protocol and programming method for your scanner. To further complicate things, programming methods varied not only between scanner brands, but sometimes even within a brand. Every scanner hobbyist had to become an expert to program his scanner.

With introduction of the Digital EZ Scan scanning receiver, programming is as simple as selecting your state and county from lists, viewing the available services, checking boxes for the services you want to monitor and saving to a scanlist. Wayne Wilson, Executive VP for GRE says, "It is very much like programming an MP3 player, that is, if you could buy an MP3 player with every song already loaded. Our newscanner also permits you to enter any favorite frequencies that are not already in the database. Radio scanning has never been so easy!"

About GRE:

Established in 1961, GRE Inc. designs, manufactures and markets the GRECOM line of analog and digital scanning receivers. Additionally,GRE is the world's #1 largest private label Original Equipment / Original Design Manufacturer of radio scanners. GRE also produces industrial and consumer communication and electronic products for a many of the world's leading electronic companies and governments.

FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION ANNOUNCES AGENDA FOR INTEROPERABILITY FORUM TO GARNER INPUT ON TECHNICAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE NATIONWIDE INTEROPERABLE PUBLIC SAFETY MOBILE BROADBAND NETWORK

On Friday, March 4, 2011, from 9:00 a.m. to 3:30 p.m., the Federal Communications Commission's (FCC's) Public Safety Homeland Security Bureau's (PSHSB) Emergency Response Interoperability Center (ERIC) will host a forum to garner input on the technical framework for the nationwide public safety mobile broadband network to ensure nationwide interoperability. This network must be technically compatible and fully interoperable from the first day of network deployment in order to serve as the nationwide broadband network envisioned for America's first responders. The forum will be held in the Commission Meeting Room at FCC Headquarters, located at 445 12th Street, SW, Room TW-C305, Washington, DC 20554.

AGENDA

Interoperability Forum: A Discussion on Creating and Implementing the Technical Framework for the Nationwide Interoperable Public Safety Mobile Broadband Network

9:00 a.m. Welcoming Remarks: James Arden Barnett, Jr., Rear Admiral (Ret.), Chief, Public Safety and Homeland Security Bureau

9:10 a.m. Guest Speaker: Bill Carrow, President, Association of Public Safety Communications Officials□International (APCO)

9:15 a.m. Panel 1: How to ensure nationwide interoperability for public safety broadband utilizing LTE 4G Technology (Moderator, Behzad Ghaffari, Systems Engineering Chief, ERIC, PSHSB)

The FCC has determined that LTE is the technology that will best provide a baseline for required interoperability and operability for public safety broadband communications. This technology enjoys commercial deployments, worldwide 3GPP standards, and a wide ecosystem of devices and network equipment. While the technology builds on a nationwide architecture to deploy the network of networks for public safety, issues impacting interoperability need to be addressed.

Panel 1

· Dr. Kenneth Budka☐Senior Director, Advanced Mission Critical Communications, Bell Labs, Alcatel-Lucent

· Brian Daly☐Director Core & Government/Regulatory Standards, AT&T Mobility Services LLC

· Dr. Dennis Martinez☐Chief Technology Officer, Harris RF Communications Group

· Emil Olbrich☐Electronics Engineer, National Institute of Standards & Technology (NIST)

10:30 a.m. Break

10:40 a.m. Panel 2: Solutions for the deployment of Radio Access Network equipment to achieve nationwide Operability and Interoperability (Moderator, Pat Amodio, RF Engineering Chief, ERIC, PSHSB)

To ensure nationwide Interoperability, a minimum level of Operability must be established. Without a minimum level of Operability, public safety user devices may not be supported and nationwide Interoperability will not be accomplished. This panel addresses the deployment of Radio Access Network in Public Safety Broadband networks nationwide, in order to facilitate interoperability and a minimum level of performance for public safety users.

Panel 2

· Jeff Anderson☐Wireless Broadband System Architect. Motorola Solutions, Inc.

· Mark Funka☐Director, Network System Performance, Verizon Wireless

· Mark McDiarmid☐Vice President, Radio Network Engineering, T-Mobile

· Allan Sadowski☐Information Technology Manager; North Carolina State Highway Patrol

· John Santo☐Executive Director, Wireless Systems Program Office, Department of Homeland Security, Customs and Border Patrol

12:00 p.m. Lunch Break

1:00 p.m. Introductory Remarks for the Afternoon Session: Amy Levine, Special Counsel to

FCC Chairman Genachowski

1:10 p.m. Panel 3: Core Network, Security and Services (Moderator, Professor Henning Schulzrinne, Columbia University & Engineering Fellow, FCC)

As the nationwide interoperable broadband network is built for public safety, a set of security features will help to meet public safety expectations for a reliable and secure communication. Additional nationwide core services such as authentication or application support may be considered with various implementation scenarios. Sharing resources between the broadband network and the emerging NG911 system may offer opportunities for additional functionality and cost savings.

Panel 3

· Walter Magnussen□Director, Telecommunications, Texas A&M University

· Byron J. Neal□Chief Network Architect, Syniverse

· John Powell□Interoperability Chair, National Public Safety Telecommunications Council (NPSTC)

· Jack Suess□Vice President of Information Technology & Chief Information Officer, University of Maryland Baltimore County (UMBC); Chair, InCommon Steering Committee

2:15 p.m. Break

2:30 p.m. Federal and secondary use of the public safety broadband network: An overview (Erika E. Olsen, Special Counsel, PSHSB)

2:45 p.m. Panel 4: Where we go from here (Moderator: Jennifer A. Manner, Deputy Chief, PSHSB)

How do we ensure the network that is deployed takes advantage of the cost efficiencies of the commercial technology market? How do we ensure the network is spectrally efficient? How do we ensure the network evolves continually so that public safety is not left with outdated networks as in years past?

Panel 4

· Dennis Roberson□Vice Provost for Corporate Relations and Strategic Initiatives, and Computer Science Research Professor, Illinois Institute of Technology; President and CEO of Roberson and Associates, LLC

· Bill Schrier□Chief Technology Officer, City of Seattle

· Bill Price□Director Broadband Programs, Division of Telecommunications, State of Florida

576. VHF Interoperability Channel Naming

Yahoo group: ScanIndiana
Date: 2011-04-10 02:46:57 UTC
From: starcom21@RadioReference.com
Topic: 576 Message: 576

VHF Interoperability Channel Naming

By John S. Powell
The first documented use of interoperability channels is in the early 1960s shortly after the two-channel, VHF FM mobile radio was first marketed. Art McDole, long-time Northern California Association of Public-Safety Communications Officials (APCO) International frequency advisor and communications director for Monterey County, Calif., saw a dramatic increase in requests for secondary VHF frequencies by law-enforcement agencies coupled with a lack of interoperability. Working through what was then the California Disaster Office (CDO), the state of California licensed the state agency-only frequency 154.92 MHz for what became known as the California Law Enforcement Mutual Aid Radio System (CLEMARS).
The VHF channel is still widely known by CLEMARS even though the name was recently updated to follow the intrastate version of the American National Standards Institute (ANSI) channel naming standard, and with expansion to other bands, a dozen CLEMARS channels are used across California. The fact that this was a simplex channel enhanced its usability because its limited range made it incident specific. Pairing with any other VHF channel for repeater use would have left it unusable whenever the other channel was located adjacent to an incumbent VHF channel because the FCC doesn't formally pair channels in that band. Currently, channels in the UHF, 700 and 800 MHz bands are all paired by FCC rule, allowing the use of tactical repeaters with relative ease. Unfortunately, this lack of pairing left the VHF band without any designated repeater channels for interoperability. With VHF continuing nationally to be the most heavily used band for public-safety communications, the need for standardized repeater pairs to provide wider coverage is a significant requirement.
In April 2010, work began independently in Minnesota and Texas to pair existing FCC Part 90 national VHF interoperability channels for use in on-scene tactical repeaters. Formal proposals were developed and discussed within Minnesota's Allied Radio Matrix for Emergency Response (ARMER) group and Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) region VI's regional emergency communications coordination working group (RECCWG), with coordination through the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) Office of Emergency Communications (OEC) by its regional coordinators and Ross Merlin, author of the national interoperability field operations guide (NIFOG) at DHS/OEC headquarters. A formal proposal subsequently was submitted by the state of Texas to the National Public Safety Telecommunications Council's (NPSTC's) interoperability committee for consideration as an addition to the ANSI Naming Standard (APCO/NPSTC ANS 1.104.1-2010: Standard Channel Nomenclature for the Public Safety Interoperability Channel).

ANS 1.104.1-2010, initially approved by ANSI June 9, 2010, contains two parts. The normative part describes the formula and supporting logic used to implement the standard, and the informative part lists the application of the formulas to existing FCC-designated Part 90 nationwide interoperability channels in the form of tables listed in channel name and frequency order. Changes to the normative part of the standard require a full re-vetting of the standard, while updates to the tables --- without changing the formula --- are considered minor and can be made without a full re-vetting of the standard. Thus, it was desirable to implement these changes by only addressing the names themselves using the existing formula.
The proposal from Texas was designed to pair the existing VHF general use tactical channels (VTAC11 to VTAC14) to provide maximum separation between receive and transmit (RX/TX) frequencies for ease of implementation. The proposal strictly addressed transportable repeaters with low transmit power (typically 20 watts output or less) designed for on-scene use in support of an incident, either emergent or planned. Three pairs were identified with RX/TX separations greater than 4.25 megahertz that could, using high-quality receivers and transmitters, be implemented without requiring a duplexer if antennas were properly located. In fact, this implementation could be accomplished using an interconnect net on an audio bridging device or gateways that are considered standard equipment in most mobile communications vehicles (MCVs) with proper adjustments and antenna placement.
In examining the Texas proposal from a nationwide perspective, it was determined that none of the proposed pairs were usable in Puerto Rico (PR) and the U.S. Virgin Islands (USVI). If these pairs were to be truly nationwide, at least one of them needed to be usable in the Caribbean. Texas officials initially expressed a need for two statewide interoperability channel pairs. Follow-on discussions were subsequently held by NPSTC with VHF stakeholders in other states, including California, Minnesota, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, Oklahoma, Wisconsin and Wyoming, with consensus quickly reached. Although too late to include in the initial publication of the APCO/ANSI/NPSTC channel naming standard, a best practice determined by appropriate stakeholder representatives could be given national exposure in the upcoming 2011 revision of the NIFOG and then submitted to ANSI as the first revision to the naming standard.
An unofficial opinion from key personnel in the FCC's Public Safety and Homeland Security Bureau (PSHSB) indicated that the use of these channels in a repeated mode at temporary sites (temporary mobile relay, FCC station class FB2T) wasn't prohibited by current Part 90 rules and regulations. While there appears to be no FCC restriction on licensing of these interoperability channels at fixed sites (FCC station class FB or FB2), such use could be problematic, particularly with the potential for high-power base/repeater stations --- 60 watts or more, often at high elevations above average terrain --- causing interference to on-scene users of these tactical channels across a wide area. The intent for tactical repeater use within the local/state public-safety practitioner community was solely for low-power use at 20 watts output or less for incident-based deployable systems, and then only as designated by an incident's communications unit leader (COML) or incident commander on that incident's radio communications plan ICS Form 205.

As designed, these new names would be additions to the ANS 1.104.1-2010 name tables and a minor change to the standard not requiring a lengthy public comment period. In selecting the recommended pairs, the following points were considered:
1. Which frequencies to pair, frequency separation and PR/USVI restrictions;
2. Continuous tone-coded subaudible squelch (CTCSS) use; and
3. Operating practices
. Primary and secondary pair
. Shared use and priority
After considerable deliberation by NPSTC's interoperability committee with public-safety communications practitioners across the United States, the following proposal was presented to the NPSTC governing board at its June 15, 2010, meeting:
1. Available pairings --- low-in/high-out for repeaters, and shown as subscriber radio TX/RX pairing were:
. VTAC11/VTAC14 --- 151.1375/159.4725 --- this pairing has the maximum separation possible for the VTAC channels: 8.335 megahertz
. VTAC12/VTAC13 --- 154.4525/158.7375 --- separation is 4.285 megahertz
. VTAC11/VTAC13 --- 151.1375/158.7375 --- separation is 7.6 megahertz
. VTAC12/VTAC14 --- 154.4525/159.4725 --- separation is 5.02 megahertz
. VTAC13/VTAC14 --- 158.7375/159.4725 --- separation is 0.735 megahertz --- duplexer required, but usable in PR/USVI
2. Available names for VHF tactical repeater channels:
.VTAC15, VTAC16, VTAC18 and VTAC19 were considered. However, with hope for the future addition of national VHF channels (including designating 155.1600 MHz for national SAR), these were kept in reserve.
. VTAC33 to VTAC38 were also available. Because selected pairs can be operated either way (repeater low-in/high-out or high-in/low-out), both are provided.
3. Final name proposal. NPSTC proposed the following six pairings and associated names:
Name Pair (subscriber RX/TX)
VTAC33 = VTAC14/VTAC11 separation 8.335 megahertz
VTAC34 = VTAC13/VTAC12 separation 4.285 megahertz
VTAC35 = VTAC14/VTAC13 separation 0.735 megahertz (for PR/USVI only)
With many parts of the country following the federal standard of high-in/low-out for repeaters, the following pairing was also proposed to support co-siting these channels with federal users:
Name Pair (subscriber RX/TX)
VTAC36 = VTAC11/VTAC14 separation 8.335 megahertz
VTAC37 = VTAC12/VTAC13 separation 4.285 megahertz
VTAC38 = VTAC13/VTAC14 separation 0.735 megahertz (for PR/USVI only)
Because channel resources within subscriber radios are often limited, NPSTC recommended that the primary frequencies for tactical repeaters be

VTAC36, VTAC37 and VTAC38 for two reasons:
. A preferred national standard for deciding which channel pair sets to use is highly desirable, as is following the federal standard for high-in/low-out, and
. The direct or simplex mode for these pairings --- transmitting on the repeater output --- are VTAC11, VTAC12 and VTAC13 respectively. For subscriber radios using a button to select repeat or direct mode (if CTCSS and channel names on the radio display can be appropriately programmed) this configuration relieves the requirement to dedicate three added channel slots to support both direct and repeated modes, an important consideration for radios with limited capacity.
4. CTCSS recommendation. To provide for controlled repeater access, and to keep two repeaters within range of each other, but paired oppositely (such as one on VTAC33 and the other on VTAC36) from locking up, the following tone recommendation was made:
. CTCSS 136.5 hertz on repeater input, CSQ on repeater output.
5. Operational use.
. To preserve simplex channel availability, designate a primary and secondary repeater pair. For example, if one transportable repeater is used, it should be on VTAC36 (VTAC11/VTAC14 paired). If a second is needed, it should be on VTAC37 (VTAC12/VTAC13 paired) with the understanding that there would remain no available simplex VTAC channels. VTAC13 and/or VTAC14 could be used as talk around in either or both use cases, at the risk of being interfered with by repeater users who can't hear the talk-around transmissions.
. VTAC35/38 (VTAC13/VTAC14 paired) should be used as a repeater pair only in PR/USVI where VTAC11 and VTAC12 are unavailable.
. Repeater use should have no priority over simplex use of the involved channel(s).
. It is strongly recommended that tactical repeaters be activated only when called for by a COML as documented on an ICS Form 205 for an incident.
The NPSTC governing board approved this proposal June 15 with an added 45 days of public comment before the report was to be submitted to APCO's Standards Development Committee (SDC) for adding to the standard. During the 45-day period, only positive comments on the proposal were received and the completed proposal, including modifications to the APCO/NPSTC ANS 1.104.1-2010 tables, was transmitted to APCO's SDC Aug. 2. The proposal was considered by APCO's SDC and approved Nov. 19. It's pending reformatting and submittal to ANSI as Revision 1 to the published standard. The final recommendations and tables have been included in the recently released revision of the NIFOG and by several states in revisions to their own communications field operations guides (FOGs).

AT&T Intros Mobile Cellular Sites For Government
<http://www.911dispatch.com/2011/04/att-intros-mobile-cellular-sites-for-government/>

April 25, 2011 at 1:46 pm

Public safety agencies can now purchase their own mobile cellular site from AT&T to provide communications for remote locations or at active emergency scenes. Today the company introduced its Remote Mobility Zone product, which can be arranged for either fixed or mobile installations. It links to AT&T's network via satellite or Internet for up to 28 simultaneous calls or data connections within a half-mile (mobile) or one-mile (fixed) radius. The company says the product provide 2.5g-level GSM phone service, or what's called EDGE. The Internet back-haul version requires at least a 256 Kbps connection, which could be provided by DSL service. The new product mimics the consumer-level, so-called "femotocell" offered by AT&T under the brand name 3G MicroCell that was introduced last year. In a press release, AT&T says the new equipment and voice plans are /only/ available in counties where AT&T already has service, and the mobile version is available /only/ to government users. The gear automatically manages the available spectrum at the set-up site by detecting in-use frequencies, detecting interference, and selecting the appropriate channels to use. The equipment costs $2,700, and a monthly voice plan is also required.

The short mast (left) connects to AT&T's control unit, and then directs cellular calls either though a satellite or Internet (IP) connection to AT&T's telephone network.

Network-Based Tracking Gives Law Enforcement Alternative to GPS

FYI

If this is Technology is here and I know it has been for awhile, Than why would any agency have to evacuate a neighborhood and tie up Departments to negotiate with someone they were talking to on a cell phone they believed to be inside, Then do this for hours and Teargas the place and Go in and find no one because the person was somewhere else on the cell phone

Yes this is a great tool to be used by the good guys if used properly. Sometimes I believe that the Scanner and Communications Hobbyist know more about what is going on then the People We listen to it is time to educate the ones who protect us.

Individuals in the midst of committing a crime better leave their mobile devices at home, as law enforcement personnel are tracking cell signals more accurately.

Assisted Global Position Satellite system tracking (A-GPS) has been around for more than a decade and used effectively by police and government entities to keep tabs on potential suspects. But network-based tracking, which uses signals from cell towers, is steadily improving and quickly moving to the forefront in surveillance operations.

Unlike A-GPS, which some cell phone users can recognize and stop by tampering with the GPS chip in their device, network-based tracking using cell towers can't be detected by cellular users.

"The feedback I get from law enforcement agencies said that GPS doesn't solve the problems they have," said Marty Feuerstein, chief technology officer of Polaris Wireless. "A lot of [officers] tell me that it's easy for users to disable GPS, you can jam it [and] there are battery life implications."

One network-based tracking software package is Polaris Wireless' Wireless Location Signatures (WLS) technology. The program is allowing police and other officials ☐ without carrying handheld devices or bulky hardware ☐ to pinpoint an individual or group's position within 50 meters using data from cell towers.

As a mobile device registers signal strengths and delay times from other cell phones, the devices report that data back to a base station. The WLS software, which is housed on a computer server specified by the agency using the program, takes the compiled information and correlates it against a radio environment map using a pattern-matching algorithm, giving the approximate location of whoever is holding the cell phone.

GPS tracking is still useful however, according to Jeff Kagan, a telecommunications industry analyst. He said both network-based and GPS systems perform well, although their usage should depend on the situation.

"For GPS, you need to see the sky, whereas with wireless you don't," Kagan said. "But GPS can get you very, very close. Which one is better? I don't really think we can say, but ultimately, law enforcement should have both."

The accuracy of network-based tracking is dependent upon cell tower density, so while the software can be effective in suburban and rural areas, urban locations are where the best results are seen. Feuerstein admitted that WLS technology does better indoors, but in suburban locations, it can pick up a cell phone location within about 100 meters on average.

Kagan said that reason was exactly why GPS remains popular.

"You still have to triangulate between cell towers," Kagan said, referring to network-based tracking. "The more towers you have, the more accurate it will be."

If better results are wanted ☐ particularly in nonurban environments with long distances between cell towers ☐ beacons, antennae and small portable base stations called femtocells can be deployed to enhance location results.

The WLS technology can also be used to set up a "geo-fence," where anyone with a mobile device approaching a monitored area would be immediately picked up and registered on a computer screen.

While surveillance operations typically require warrants before tracking suspects, the ability to track without detection is a useful tool during investigations, giving law enforcement a head start on observing and apprehending a potential criminal.

"If someone was walking around and entered the [target] zone, the geo-fence would turn red, flash and [the program] puts an alarm on the screen," Feuerstein said.

When asked about cost, particularly as it relates to state and local law enforcement agencies, Feuerstein said it depends on the purchased software package.

Vertical Tracking on the Horizon

Today's network-based tracking technology is horizontally based ☐ capable of identifying targets in a specific area. But what is missing is an ability to determine how high in a building a person is. But that capacity is coming, according to Feuerstein.

His company has been working on technology that returns location results within a few floors, depending on the situation.

"In general, we can get within five floors," Feuerstein said, regarding the vertical tracking technology under development. "It's hard to get down to floor-level reliability. It's one thing to do location if you are on the ground or the first few floors. But it's much more of a challenge if you are in a penthouse of a 50-story building."

The program that offers vertical pinpointing is currently undergoing testing and although Feuerstein wouldn't reveal a release date or formal name to the software, he indicated that it would be released by the end of 2011.

Malicious Software Features Usama bin Laden Links to Ensnare
Unsuspecting Computer Users

The Internet Crime Complaint Center (IC3) urges computer users to not open unsolicited (spam) e-mails, including clicking links contained within those messages. Even if the sender is familiar, the public should exercise due diligence. Computer owners must ensure they have up-to-date firewall and anti-virus software running on their machines to detect and deflect malicious software.

The IC3 recommends the public do the following:

§ Adjust the privacy settings on social networking sites you frequent to make it more difficult for people you know and do not know to post content to your page. Even a "friend" can unknowingly pass on multimedia that's actually malicious software.

§ Do not agree to download software to view videos. These applications can infect your computer.

Report e-mails you receive that purport to be from the FBI. Criminals often use the FBI's name and seal to add legitimacy to their fraudulent schemes. In fact, the FBI does not send unsolicited e-mails to the public. Should you receive unsolicited messages that feature the FBI's name, seal, or that reference a division or unit within the FBI or an individual employee, report it to the Internet Crime Complaint Center at www.ic3.gov <http://www.ic3.gov/> .

...We need your feedback --- Take our weather survey...
Published: Fri, 10 Jun 2011 09:34:54 EDT
The National Weather Service is assessing improvements to its service delivery architecture. We're in user requirements gathering phase and we're requesting comments to better inform the NWS of user's current and future service needs.

We Need Your Feedback, Take Our Weather Survey
<http://www.weather.gov/cgi-bin/nwsexit.pl?url=http://nwsrearch.ideascale.com/>

The NWS is undertaking research, once again this year, on how satisfied you are with our products and services and would appreciate your feedback. The purpose of this research is to help the NWS improve its services. The survey will take approximately 20 minutes to complete and need not be finished all at once. We also encourage you to take a moment and complete one or more of the additional sections focused on Climate, Fire Weather, Hydrology, and Tsunamis. The survey is posted here.

603. Lessons Learned from a Narrowbanding Project

Lessons Learned from a Narrowbanding Project

July 27, 2011

By John Larribeau
Officials from Spokane, Wash., who have completed a narrowbanding project, submitted the following suggestions. The city's 650 VHF and UHF radios were modified during the project. The city's 1,000 public-safety radios are being transitioned to an 800 MHz network.
*1. Licensing. *As one of the first steps, we modified our existing licenses for dual emissions both wideband and narrowband. With the dual status, we were covered during the transition when some radios were using wideband and others had been switched to narrowband. Also, the FCC doesn't require additional license modifications when the switch is complete. The wideband emission designator will automatically fall off the license Jan. 1, 2013.
*2. Asset Inventory. *An accurate inventory will ensure all radios get modified. With an accurate inventory, you can figure out how many radios aren't narrowband capable and must be either removed from service or replaced. The sooner this is done, the more time you have to shop for the best prices for the replacement radios. The inventory also provides an indication of your progress during the project.
*3. Testing. *I can't stress this enough. We tested each model radio on the bench well before the actual switch to see just what was required and the best way to do it. Finding problems once you've started the project can be a disaster for your timeline and add frustration to the operators and users. We identified many problems and came up with corrections or workarounds during testing that allowed our actual switch to come off without a hitch. We researched each model of radio in our inventory and then tested it to see if it would go narrowband as advertised, and if so, what additional steps were required. Some models required us to adjust the deviation up or down in addition to just switching the bandwidth to be close to the 2.5-kilohertz target. We also made sure that we had all of the necessary software and programming cables on hand to do the job.
We also looked at the job itself. How long would it take to reprogram one radio using various methods? We converted one of the radio shop's service vehicles into a mobile lab just for this project.
*4. Planning. *The timetable for the project took considerable planning. This is where all the work before the actual switch took place. All of the radio change-outs took place here. With our citywide system, we could do the actual switch two different ways. The first was to switch half of our voted receivers to a different PL/CTCSS code and load the new code into the radios when they were switched to narrowband. This would allow us to take our time with the conversion because both wideband and narrowband radios would work on the system without great variances in the audio levels. This would, however, limit the coverage and range in some areas.

The second option was to accomplish the whole switch over a weekend. This had a number of advantages for us. It allowed us access to most, if not all of the radios --- only emergency crews were in the field. We conducted over-the-air testing without major disruption to users and produced the minimum interference to normal operations. The down side was the technicians' long hours. However, we chose this option and were pleased with the results.
*5. Coordination. *Coordination is vital if the project is to be accomplished smoothly. All network users and managers need to know what is going to happen and why. They also need to be aware of what to expect (10 -- 20 percent reduction in range) after the project is completed. You will need access to and the keys to spaces and vehicles to accomplish the modifications. Being locked out of a space or not being able to start vehicles to reprogram the radio can halt your progress and add extra time to the follow-up/cleanup portion of the project. As an example, we reprogrammed our largest department with 181 radios in one weekend. Four missing radios were corrected on Monday. This department broke down to about 69 percent mobile radios, 29 percent portable radios and 2 percent base repeaters or voted receivers.
*6. Execution. *The night before the actual switch, all of the equipment was assembled, tested and loaded. Final calls were made to all the various points of contact to verify that everything was in place and confirm when and where to meet at the start of the project. Because of the planning, portable radios were delivered or staged at a location where we had access to them for the switch. Vehicles with mobile radios were available with the keys or were delivered to one of our primary staging locations. It was easier and more cost effective to stage heavy construction equipment at a few locations and have our mobile lab go to them, rather than having them delivered to us. Because of this, we spent the majority of our time working on the equipment and not hunting it all down.
*7. Cost Savings. *With the state of our economy, you have to take a serious look at costs. Here are a few things to consider:
Set up mobile labs*. *Our mobile lab was accomplished fairly inexpensively. A Ford Ranger was equipped with a 1-kilowatt power inverter to power a service monitor and a 12-volt DC (VDC) tap to power the computers and other 12-volt accessories or radios. The computers were old police mobile data computers (MDCs), which we reused for this project. We used two to save time because some radio software was disk operating system (DOS) based and some was Windows base. Although we had the capability to reboot the MDCs in DOS mode, it took too much time, adding about 3 -- 4 minutes to the process each time we did it. The total cost for the mobile lab was $210 with the main cost being the inverter.
Get extra programming cables. Although we already had all of the programming cables and software, we wanted extras and spares so we could do multiple sites simultaneously. We found after-market/knock-off programming cables on the Internet at a huge savings. We also found radio interface boxes at an equally huge savings. Have multiple setups with spares so that one broken cable doesn't stop the project cold.

Coordination and weekend execution.This was probably the single, biggest cost-savings measure. We easily saved between 50 percent and 80 percent in labor alone by doing the project over the weekend. This takes into account that the technicians were paid overtime during the weekend. The time involved in trying to locate vehicles, bring them in, find keys, find portable radios and not have a mobile lab adds expensive, unproductive time for the techs.
Over-the-air testing. With our mobile lab, we were set up to fully test and align all aspects of the communications system. This included power, voltage standing wave ratio (VSWR), antenna tuning, receiver sensitivity, squelch, CTCSS levels, deviation levels and frequency. The frequency tolerance of a radio is cut in half when you go to narrowband. Some of our radios required adjustments in this area. We fabricated umbilical cables, which consisted of 2 RG-8M to BNC RF cables and a CAT-5/6 cable (data/microphone line) with a coupler for programming and microphone connections. We could program the mobile radios through a 50- or 100-foot extension cable with no problem. We could read the deviation with the same accuracy through the antenna port on the service monitor by connecting it directly to the RF in/out jack. We still had to connect the portables directly to the service monitor, because the deviation reading from the portables was erratic from inside the cab of the service vehicle. This saved time in connecting and disconnecting the RF cables to the radios. With the coupler on the data cable, we could connect and disconnect the programming cables, microphones and test set from inside the cab of the service vehicles.

HomePatrol Travel Case
<http://www.policescanners.net/mmccatalog/274-2774936-78715>Designed specifically for the Uniden HomePatrol, this nylon travel case protects the radio during transport and use. Inside the travel case holds the radio in a sectioned, ruggedized compartment, which keeps the radio firmly in place. The radio is then covered by clear plastic, with cutouts for the speaker, through which you can see the HomePatrol display and operate the radio's touch screen. Cutouts on the sides of the case allow you to access all jacks including the antenna. Another section of the case can be used to hold the AC and DC power cords, antenna, GPS, extra batteries, etc. The zip-top case includes a handle for easy transport. You can not only use the case to transport your HomePatrol safely, but you can also use the radio in the case with the antenna extended out from the side and angled up. So it's great for use in the car or in a restaurant, perhaps on the seat next to you, when you want to protect the radio from most spills and scratches but also use the radio at the same time. - Our Price $69.95

613. NSW AUSTRALIA Radio Network hacked

FYI

Happy Scanning

Don KA9QJG

IT was a $22 million encrypted radio system meant to keep police business secret from unwanted eavesdroppers.
But hi-tech hackers cracked the system within 12 months, selling off the technology to tow-truck drivers for up to $25,000 a time. In the past weeks police have changed the code after discovering the radios were also in the hands of criminals, particularly bikies.
NSW police implemented the system three years ago for security reasons.
But within a year tow truck operators were paying $12,000 to have "exclusive rights" to radios encrypted for their area and promised competitors would not have access to the same channel. For $25,000 the entire encrypted system could be bought, enabling the purchaser to listen in on all police channels throughout the metropolitan area.
It is believed more than a dozen tow truck drivers have been listening to the police network throughout Sydney for at least two years and in some cases longer.
NSW police are refusing to even acknowledge there has been any security breakdown with its radio network, which is severely embarrassing to the force. Police were confident the system was foolproof.
It's understood no one has been charged and police still have very little idea how the encrypted codes became so freely available.
Country and regional areas have not been encrypted because of the prohibitive cost.
When asked about the fact the system had been compromised and whether any one had been charged, police refused to answer.
"The NSW Police Force employs a range of strategies to ensure the security and integrity of its communications," said Assistant Commissioner Peter Barrie, who is in charge of the police communications branch. "Those strategies and their effectiveness are regularly reviewed."
A tow-truck driver who had been in possession of a radio for more than two years said yesterday: "The cops have fixed the problem for now. Everyone says their radios have gone dead."
One person recently paid $23,000 to have access to all channels. It was only after word leaked that bikies, and not just towies had been able to acquire the radios, that police acted.

620. RadioReference.com - Submit ALL Amateur Radio Repeaters / Freqs

Yahoo group: ScanIndiana

From: starcom21@RadioReference.com
Topic: 620 Message: 620

On RadioReference.com, we are now able to list ALL Amateur Radio Frequencies, not just ones related to ARES/SKYWARN.

Please submit the information to the HOME county the repeater resides in. If the repeater is definitely used in multiple counties, please let us know.

Also, LOTS of new features and updates now, and a NEW LOOK on RadioReference.com
Including nationwide frequencies (and the ability to download them onto your scanner)

Please, don't reply with info to this group, but go to the COUNTY DATABASE page and PRESS the SUBMIT TAB..

Thanks very much!

637. More police departments look to tune public out

WASHINGTON (AP) ? Police departments around the country are moving to shield their radio communications from the public as cheap, user-friendly technology has made it easy for anyone to use handheld devices to keep tabs on officers responding to crimes.

By George Frey, AP

More police agencies, citing security needs, are encrypting communications that had been public.

The practice of encryption has become increasingly common from Florida to New York and west to California, with law enforcement officials saying they want to keep criminals from using officers' internal chatter to evade them. But journalists and neighborhood watchdogs say open communications ensure that the public receives information as quickly as possible that can be vital to their safety.

I think upgrading a System should be to Make it better Not to keep Scanner listeners out . Some have upgraded and Found that Newer is not always Better when it comes to Their safety and ours . A Few have said They wish they had the old system or at least kept it as a back up .

Building a website that serves many audiences is a complex challenge.

Introducing MyFCC Beta

by: David Robbins, Managing Director

December 20th, 2011

MyFCC <http://www.flickr.com/photos/fccdotgov/6544800509/>Building a website that serves many audiences is a complex challenge. And it is a challenge best met in partnership with the site's frequent users.

That's why today we are excited to announce the public Beta launch ofMyFCC <http://my.fcc.gov/>, and to solicit and encourage your feedback, questions and recommendations as part of our commitment to continual improvement of the FCC.gov experience.

MyFCC is a new tool designed to let you create a customized FCC online experience for quick access to the tools and information you need. Personalization options built into MyFCC make it possible to easily create, save and manage a customized page, choosing from a menu of "widgets" featuring a wide variety of the FCC's most frequently used tools and services. Examples include the latest headlines and official documents, the Daily Digest, and quick access to forms and online filings. The public Beta offers22 such widgets <http://www.fcc.gov/help/myfcc-widgets-detail-descriptions>for starters, with more on the way.

With its various customization options, MyFCC not only lets you set up a personalized page, but also allows any individual or group to easily share content where it's needed -- either onmy.fcc.gov <http://my.fcc.gov/>or on other websites. Each individual widget can be embedded on any other website and you can also create full dashboards of widgets to share with friends and colleagues.

In the process of Beta launching FCC.gov, we are also helping other government agencies make their own online offerings accessible and open to everyone. MyFCC is powered by an open-source module known as the Content API, an innovation other federal agencies can easily install and use. TheContent API <http://drupal.org/project/contentapi>makes the contents of the website available to developers and other interested parties for projects on their own websites. For more information about our API development, visitFCC.gov/developer <http://www.fcc.gov/developer>.

We encourage everyone -- telecom professionals, legal practitioners, federal officials and consumers alike -- to give MyFCC a try and to provide feedback and suggestions for where, together, we take it from here.

Dear Santa,

I don't want much for the Holidays I just want the person reading this to be happy.

My Radio Friends are the fruit cake of life --- some nutty, some soaked in alcohol, some

Sweet some just misunderstood but mix them together and they're all friends.

On the Holidays you always hear people talking about what they want & bought.

This is what I want:

Motorola Solutions Takes Full Ownership of Vertex Standard LMR (12/28/11)
Motorola Solutions is taking full ownership of the Vertex Standard LMR business. The effective date for the reorganization will be Jan. 1, 2012. Motorola Solutions previously owned 80 percent of the company <http://www.radioresourcemag.com/newsArticle.cfm?news_id=2327>.

"There is no change for Motorola Solutions customers and partners," said Tama McWhinney, corporate communications, Motorola Solutions. "Vertex Standard LMR products will continue to be available through the normal Vertex Standard channels."

Jun Hasegawa, president and CEO of Vertex Standard, announced the corporate reorganization. "After four years of joint venture with Motorola, we have decided to transfer the Vertex Standard LMR business to Motorola and focus on Amateur, Marine and Air-band business," he said in a letter to customers.

Vertex Standard will once again be Yaesu Musen; a name business partners have been familiar with for over 50 years, Hasegawa said.

655. Google Maps Adds Public Safety Alerts

Google Maps Adds Public Safety Alerts
<http://www.911dispatch.com/2012/01/google-maps-adds-public-safety-alerts/>

Posted: 25 Jan 2012 02:12 PM PST

As part of a larger crisis response project, Google Maps has today launched a Public Alerts Web page, showing the locations of weather, earthquakes, floods and other location-specific incidents. For example, today's map shows flooding in northern Indiana and severe thunderstorm warning in Louisiana. In a blog posting <http://blog.google.org/2012/01/public-alerts-now-on-google-maps.html>, Public Alerts engineer Steve Hakusa says, "We're learning as we go." He does not say how quickly information from various federal government sources will be posted on the maps. A question-and-answer page says Google will expand the range of alert sources over time, including state and private sources. Google already provides a Common Alerting Protocol-based service <http://alert-hub.appspot.com/> to which local public safety agencies can subscribe, and transmit emergency or urgent information. View the Public Alerts map page <http://www.google.org/publicalerts>.

This is the main map of Google Public Alerts. You can zoom in and see details of any specific incident.

City Extends Test of Text-To-911 Feature
<http://www.911dispatch.com/2012/01/city-extends-test-of-text-to-911-feature/>

Posted: 25 Jan 2012 12:40 PM PST

A test of texting 911 in Durham (NC) has been extended by three months to collect more data for a decision if the service should become permanent. The city, in collaboration with Intrado and Verizon Wireless, has been accepting text messages from citizens since August 2011, and routing them directly to the city's public safety comm center for handling by dispatchers. The city has not reported on the level of success of texting 911, which is intended to help those with hearing disabilities and people who cannot directly make a voice call to 911. In a press release announcing the extension of the test period, comm center director James Soukup admitted, "There can be limitations to sending an emergency text message.” He said the city wants to thoroughly explore all the possible incident scenarios, “to see if this type of technology works and if any problems arise that must be corrected before ‘text-to-911’ technology could be implemented on a widespread level.” The press release lists several issues with text-to-911, including text messages take time to compose and transmit, only Verizon Wireless customers can text to 911 and significantly, “If customers are outside or near the edge of the county, the message may not reach the Durham Emergency Communications Center.” Read a list of all the limitations noted by the city after the break.

According to the press release -

Verizon Wireless customers in Durham should keep the following in mind if they send a text to 911 during the extended trial period:

* Customers should use the texting option only when calling 911 is not an option.
* It can take longer to receive a text message because someone must enter the text, the message then goes through the system, and the 911 telecommunicator must read the text and then text back. Picking up the phone and calling 911 is still the most efficient way to reach emergency help. Texting is not always instantaneous, which is critical during a life-threatening emergency.
* Providing location information and nature of the emergency in the first text message is imperative since the Durham Emergency Communications Center will not be able to access the cell phone location or speak with the person who is sending the text. Text abbreviations or slang should never be used so that the intent of the dialogue can be as clear as possible.
* Customers must be in range of cell towers in the Durham County area. If customers are outside or near the edge of the county, the message may not reach the Durham Emergency Communications Center .
* Texts sent to 911 have the same 160 character limit as other text messages.
* Verizon Wireless customers must have mobile phones that are capable of sending text messages. Any text message to 911 will count either against their messaging bundle or be charged at 20 cents each.
* At this point in the trial period, the messaging software pre-loaded onto the Droid from Motorola (original version) does not format text messages correctly when the digits 911 are entered as the “To”address. Installing the free “Verizon Messages” application for Droids (version 1.3.24a) from the Android Market fixes this issue.
* The texting function should only be used for emergency situations that require an immediate response from police, fire, or emergency medical services. Non-emergency issues should still be communicated to the Durham Emergency Communication Center through its non-emergency line at (919) 560-4600.

The Durham Emergency Communication Center is the first center in North Carolina, and only the second in the U.S., to allow text-to-911 messages.

This is a Update from a Post I made over a Yr ago about a RF Device being made that would be of interest to our Scanning Communications Hobby ,, It looks like They listened and made a Module for it ,, We should always let the manufactures of scanners and Devices like this Some of our Input .

Happy Scanning

From Michael of the Wis Scanner Group Today 9 June 12

Don, the new wideband RFEMWSUB3G module is in production and should probably be available any day now: http://tinyurl.com/83ac4xh <http://tinyurl.com/83ac4xh>

I'm lucky enough to have been beta testing one of them for the past few months, and I have to say that it is superb. I've used it to find traffic on the ham bands and found that the 900MHz TV transmitter I have absolutely spews RF well outside its frequency (need to order a filter for it).

But the biggest test, the one thing that I've wanted to use the device for ever since I discovered it, is finding the Air Boss frequency at airshows. Last weekend at the Rockford airshow, I gave the unit its ultimate trial by fire. I got as close as I could to the announcer stand (where the antenna farm is at), set the RF-E to look around in the 120MHz range (the new pan/zoom functionality in the latest firmware makes browsing around the spectrum much easier), and waited for RF traffic. 60 seconds later, I was looking at this:

http://haveblue.org/airbossfreq.jpg <http://haveblue.org/airbossfreq.jpg>

Tuned my IC-R6 to 124.000, and sure enough, there was 'Boss'. I could spend the rest of the day happily snapping photos instead of hunched over the radio, trying to remember how to do a frequency search and hoping to catch a transmission at just the right time.

In short, I absolutely LOVE this thing.

This RF Explore especially at the Price sure looks interesting as something to add to our Scanner Hobby Especially at the Low Price , Of course We would not be able to Hear for example at the Air Show but We could see on the Display the RF Activity and then use our Scanner to tune it in, As we all know this type of Equipment is Very Expensive Below is a E-Mail I sent to the owner and His quick informative Reply , And I thought I would also share it with the group , So it looks in the Future We may be able to get one to cove lower then 240Mhz

Hello from Don KA9QJG A Ham Radio Scanner user I saw your Webb Site on this Very interesting Item ,I have been involved With Communications USN , Law Enforcement Ham radio since I was 14 yrs old now 65, I can see a great useful product this is for People like Me as a Communication tool to add to our Hobby , But over 75 Percent of us use Monitor and use the Frqs below 240 Mhz . Example Ham Radio, Air Shows, Marine, Railroads , Racing and Much more, I Have Posted your Site to Numerous Radio Hobby groups and we are talking Thousands of perspective customers.

I know you are in the Business to Make Money but You are losing a lot of this Market If You was to also have one that would cover the lower Freqs . I know a lot would be sold I really do not know how You are selling them so cheap, I hope I have generated some sales for You and Peaked an interest in Your products

> -------------------And the Owners Quick Answer

I sincerely appreciate your advice and the time and effort you put on spreading the voice and your feedback.

My main goal is to be able to offer affordable RF instruments, something really needed when I was an EE student 20 years ago and couldn't afford. The instruments in the Lab were so expensive that teachers prevented us from using them for the most part, just partial access in the very last year. I found that frustrating and I guess there are others like me who can really do better with the right instrument at hand.
I

How do I keep the cost this low? I am going step by step, doing all the prototypes myself, no intermediaries nor other fat, lot of testing and tryouts before I really get the most efficient and affordable components combination for the task. That is why I am offering ISM band range first, but certainly 2mts HAM radio as well as 35-40-72MHz for RC is coming next. I have lots of request for additional bands, but I need to keep the risk in reasonable levels or otherwise the cost increases very rapidly and this Adventure may end the day after it started... Plus I need quality to be under control, as the manufacturing is done thousand miles away from my eyes, there is a lot of time invested in remote automated testing and production review to guarantee users will be happy and will spread the voice. Otherwise I would have to put money on advertising which again will increase the cost...

I will keep you posted on any new band coverage; I hope to have good news before EOY. Many thanks for your time and interest!

Appreciatively,

Ariel Rocholl

This Device really looks nice And it appears they are open source and We all know they are in the business to make Money , So We as Communications
Enthustics Should try and convince them that this is a Very Large Worldwide
hobby with 75 Percent of the Stuff We listen to below the 240 MHz Range

Just think how useful this would be for Races , Trains , Planes PD/FD Ham Radio and much more , If we in numbers could convince them of this and the Money they could make Especially at the Low Price they are selling them for The just might make them go lower .

Happy Scanning

Narrowbanding Moving Slowly Toward Deadline
<http://www.911dispatch.com/2012/06/13/narrowbanding-moving-slowly-toward-deadline/>

With just six months left before a deadline to narrowband their VHF/UHF radio systems, about 40 percent of the 107,665 license holders have completed the process. But according to the Federal Communications Commission (FCC), there are still 22,889 license holders—including public safety agencies—who haven't started the process of narrowbanding their systems. The FCC set a January 1, 2013 deadline for most VHF/UHF radio systems to transition from 25 KHz bandwidth to 12.5 KHz, making more efficient use of the spectrum. Find narrowbanding project tools here <http://publicsafetytools.info/start_nb_status.php>.

First Group Waiver Affects 50,000 Vehicles
Posted 6/21/2012

The FCC is seeking comment on FirstGroup America's (FGA) June 19 request for a 12-month extension to its narrowband deadline. The waiver request is notable because it comes from the largest school bus transportation company in North America, carrying 6 million students daily in 50,000 buses operating in over 600 cities. FGA's narrowbanding obligation is sizable, requiring reprogramming of 18,000 radios and replacement of 12,000 more. Comments are due July 13. Public Notice <https://www.enterprisewireless.org/sites/default/files/insider/da-12-959a1.pdf>

Comments Sought on Waiver Request for School Bus Company (6/20/12)
The Wireless Telecommunications Bureau and Public Safety and Homeland Security Bureau are seeking comment on First Student's request for waiver of the Jan. 1, 2013, VHF and UHF narrowbanding deadline. First Student seeks a 12-month extension of the deadline, until Jan. 1, 2014, for 279 private land mobile radio (PLMR) stations throughout the United States.

First Student is a division of FirstGroup America (FGA). FGA is North America's largest school bus transportation services company, which transports 6 million students to and from school every day. Its operations include more than 600 locations and a fleet of approximately 50,000 buses.

In order to comply with the PLMR narrowbanding mandate, FGA plans to reprogram, replace and otherwise update its entire radio systems investments, which will require replacement of 12,000 radios and reprogramming of 18,000 radios. FGA will narrowband 24 systems per month, and expects to complete narrowbanding for 180 call signs by the end of 2012. It requests an extension of the narrowbanding deadline for the remaining stations subject to the Jan. 1, 2013, deadline because the national scope and complexity of its system will keep FGA from timely completing its narrowbanding efforts.

Comments are sought from parties whose operations could be impacted by the waiver being granted. Comments are due no later than July 9. Reply comments are due no later than July 19. All filings should reference the docket number of this proceeding, WT 99-87.

700. FCC Allows Indiana Department to Use Vehicular Repeater at VHF (7/20/12)

FCC Allows Indiana Department to Use Vehicular Repeater at VHF (7/20/12)
The FCC granted a Wayne County (Ind.) Sheriff Department request for waiver seeking authorization to use frequency 173.210 MHz for analog voice operations. Specifically, the department requested a waiver of Section 90.20(d)(54) of the FCC's rules to operate at 20-kilohertz bandwidth on frequency 173.210 MHz, which has a bandwidth limitation of 3 kilohertz and is not available for analog voice operations.

The request is subject to certain conditions and the commission is holding the application in abeyance for up to 60 days pending an amendment.

Specifically, the department seeks to license synthesized vehicular repeater (SVR) equipment manufactured by Pyramid Communications for use on 173.210 MHz with an effective radiated power (ERP) of 1 watt. The request is for a frequency in the 173.2 -- 173.4 MHz band rather than in the 150 ??-- 160 MHz band on the grounds that "interference ... can occur between the mobile radio and SVR operating within the same VHF band."

The FCC placed the department's request on public notice in 2009.

The FCC granted the waiver request with the following conditions:

. Operation on frequency 173.210 MHz is on a secondary, non-interfering basis to all primary stations on frequencies 173.20375, 173.21 and 173.225 MHz that are authorized as of the initial grant date of this station.

. Beginning Jan. 1, 2013, this station must operate on channels with a bandwidth of 12.5 kilohertz or less, or with equivalent efficiency, regardless of the emission bandwidths set forth on this license.

In addition, the commission instructed the agency to file an application amendment within 60 days to change the mobile area of operation to countywide, and to specify the quantity of vehicular repeaters with the MO3 station class code.

"We will hold the application in abeyance for 60 days after the release date of this order to allow the department to file such an application amendment," the order said.

The order is available here <http://transition.fcc.gov/Daily_Releases/Daily_Business/2012/db0720/DA-12-1163A1.txt>.

Last year, the FCC requested input on whether to initiate a rulemaking proceeding to consider Pyramid Communications' recommended rule changes and other rule changes that would be necessary to facilitate the use of vehicular repeater systems by public-safety licensees in the VHF band.

Pyramid filed the request in 2010 and supplied additional information in 2011 <http://www.radioresourcemag.com/newsArticle.cfm?news_id=7586>.

Understandably, I maintain and own several sites also and sometimes things slip by that need updated everyonce in awhile. I know I appreciate when someone points out things that need correction.

Kenwood Radios Certified Under FCC Part 80 for Marine Band Use (8/22/12)
Kenwood NEXEDGE and Project 25 (P25) two-way radios have been certified under FCC Part 80 for marine band use. These digital VHF radios can be used on marine band channels in designated areas around navigable rivers, on lakes, in harbors and along inter-coastal waterways.

This certification makes the radios ideal for use by government agencies such as law enforcement including fish and game and wildlife conservation, fire services, search and rescue (SAR), lifeguards and emergency management. Other users include utilities, power plants and commercial boats and ships as well as all port, harbor, lock, dam, bridge and flood control operations.

The models included in the marine band certification include the P25 models TK-5220K/K2, TK-5720K and TK5710HBK, as well as NEXEDGE models NX-200K/K2/SK, NX-210K2 and NX-700HK.

Report Examines Amateur Radio for Emergencies (8/22/12)
The FCC released a report with recommendations and impediments to the uses of amateur radio service during emergencies and disaster relief. The report follows a request for comment as part of the Middle Class Tax Relief and Job Creation Act of 2012 <http://www.radioresourcemag.com/newsArticle.cfm?news_id=8104>.

Recommendations include ensuring that amateur radio operators who volunteer to assist in emergency communications during disasters be knowledgeable about the procedural framework that guides emergency response. The FCC said the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) Office of Emergency Communications (OEC) would be qualified to work with the amateur radio community on training and credentialing policies.

Impediments outlined in the report include private land use restrictions, burdensome municipal restrictions on antenna height, superfluous permitting and inspection processes, local regulations regarding texting and cell operation while driving that don't exempt amateur radio and public ignorance of the benefits of amateur radio contributions.

The full report is available here <http://transition.fcc.gov/Daily_Releases/Daily_Business/2012/db0820/DA-12-1342A1.pdf>.

DHS Wraps Up $8M Multiband Radio Project with Thales, Harris (8/27/12)
/By Sandra Wendelken/
The Department of Homeland Security (DHS) concluded its $8 million

Multiband Radio (MBR) pilot project, shipping more than 100 total radios to 15 of the public-safety agencies that participated in the various pilots and tests of the units.

Each agency that partnered with DHS on the project was slated to receive several radios and chargers, said David Boyd, director of DHS Science & Technology (S&T) Office for Interoperability and Compatibility.

"You can add a whole state in these radios," said Morgan Hoaglin, communications coordinator for the Arizona Division of Emergency Management, who tested the radios. "We had no complete failures, and we certainly taxed it. We are now seeing new Project 25 (P25) features such as noise cancellation technology. We are also seeing some interoperability we didn't have before."

In 2008, DHS announced a $6.3 million contract with Thales Communications <http://www.radioresourcemag.com/newsArticle.cfm?news_id=2484>for its Liberty multiband radio. Harris' Unity multiband radio was added to the project, which included numerous pilots among local, state and federal agencies with various agencies and venues. Harris officials said the company didn't receive any money from DHS but benefited from participation in the DHS-sponsored pilots.

For example, last October, a pilot was conducted in Chicago with more than seven agencies participating and testing the Harris Unity XG-100P portable <http://www.radioresourcemag.com/newsArticle.cfm?news_id=7603>. Similar pilots were held in Miami <http://www.radioresourcemag.com/newsArticle.cfm?news_id=7265>, New Orleans <http://www.radioresourcemag.com/newsArticle.cfm?news_id=6970> and Arizona <http://www.radioresourcemag.com/newsArticle.cfm?news_id=6721>.

"Today, many state, local and federal emergency responders face communications interoperability challenges that put lives at risk," said Boyd. "Thanks to the participation and insights of our state, local and federal pilot partners, S&T's new multiband radio allows responders to communicate with other responding agencies and jurisdictions, regardless of radio band."

DHS and Thales used an initial test with users to change some features on the radios suggested by the public-safety officials. Boyd said the antenna technology was the most difficult technology piece of the multiband radio.

Multiband radios can operate on multiple, noncontiguous spectrum bands. Public-safety spectrum is assigned at 150 -- 174, 450 -- 512, 700 and 800 MHz, along with other bands used by federal agencies. The program has sparked industry development and competition in the multiband radio sector, Boyd said. Three manufacturers have commercially available multiband radios "with more close behind."

The Department of Interior (DOI) purchased $90,000 worth of multiband radios --- which Boyd said cost about the same as single-band P25 radios. The U.S. Marine Corps is expected to buy $49 million worth of the radios.

A report on the pilots should be available by the end of the year. S&T will release a multiband radio procurement guide by the second quarter of 2013. The guide will provide lessons learned from the project and direction for public-safety officials on how to identify which radio model will best fit their needs.

Pilot partners who are receiving new multiband radios include:

. Arizona Emergency Management

. Blaine (Wash.) Police Department

. Boise (Idaho) Fire Department

. Chicago Police Department/Emergency Management

. DHS Immigration/Customs Enforcement (ICE)

. Hawaii Civil Defense

. Indianapolis Fire Department
